—S. 417—Principles—Interference with acquittal.

In an appeal against a conviction, it is only necessary to satisfy the Appellate Court that there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused to induce the Appellate Court to interfere, but when there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, the Appellate Court will not interfere with an acquittal. Nor will the Court in this or any other proceedings forget that the burden of proof lies upon the prosecution. It is for the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused; it is not for the accused to prove his innocence. The High Court will not interfere merely because there is room for an honest difference of opinion. The High Court will not interfere unless it is quite clear that the Judge or the Magistrate whose judgment of acquittal is appealed against is wrong. It is not intended that S. 417 should be used in every case where Government thinks there should be a conviction. It is not a power lightly to be used. It should be used only when there can be no reasonable doubt upon the record as to the guilt of the accused. Emperor v. Gulab Shah Kadir Shah.

A District Magistrate who has ordered the dismissal of a Criminal Appeal, merely by reason of the non-appearance of the appellant, is competent to set aside such order and thereafter to hear and decide the appeal according to law. The Cr. P. C. does not permit the dismissal of an appeal upon the ground that the appellant does not appear to support it. If an appeal is not dismissed summarily under S. 421, its disposal is governed by S. 423 and notwithstanding the non-appearance of the parties, the Court is bound to send for the record, peruse it and give judgment. Ss. 421 and 423 of the Code, read together, make it imperative, on a Criminal Appellate Court to hear the appeal at the time and the place named in the notices of appeal issued by it, and a hearing, of which no notice has been given, is, therefore, illegal. *Ratan Chand v. Once the Appellate Court, decides to admit the appeal, it becomes unnecessary for the Advocate to address it further, and the power of Appellate Court to dismiss the appeal summarily comes to an end, and that section ceases to apply

The provisions of S. 422 then become mandatory, and it is the duty of the Court inter alia to cause notice to be given to the appellant or his Advocate of the time and place at which such appeal will be heard. Under such circumstances, S. 423 also applies and only confers the power to dismiss the appeal after hearing the appellant or his Advocate, if he appears, and the Public Prosecutor, if he appears, besides perusing the record. Once the appeal has been admitted, it cannot be dismissed without hearing the accused or his Advocate. Ta Pu v. Emperor.

———Ss. 417, 162—Scope—Finding of fact arrived by lower Court—Duty of Appellate Court—Presumption of innocence of accused, whether lessened by fact of acquittal.

In case of an appeal at the instance of the Government under S. 417 as a matter of jurisdiction, the whole case is at large before the High Court both as to the facts and as to the law. The Appellate Court will be slow to disturb a finding of fact arrived at by a Judge who has had opportunities for assessing the value of evidence which the Appellate Court has not had. But the Appellate Court pursuing this principle will be slow to substitute a view of the facts of its own for an opposite view of the facts held by the Judge below, where the latter are, upon the evidence, reasonable views, even though the Judges in the Appellate Court might have preferred a view of their own if the matter had been res integra. Moreover, the presumption of innocence and the title of the accused to the benefit of any doubt are certainly not lessened by the fact that they have been

———S. 418 (1), 410, 536—Scope—Trial by Jury when it ought to be by Assessors—Appeal on fact, if maintainable.

Per Biscas, J. (McNair, J. contra).—Trial by Jury is not necessarily and in all circumstances a "privilege" which the accused is bound to accept as such or which must be presumed as a matter of law to be so "beneficial" as may be thrust on him. If it is a question of choice, it should be for the accused and the accused alone to make the election. It may be that it was the policy but not intention of the Legislature to treat trial by Jury as a privilege. A Jury trial would be a privilege only if and to the extent it could be regarded as sacrosanct, not where no finality attaches to it as in a Sessions trial held in a High Court. Any sentimental advantage that may be supposed to be inherent in such a mode of trial on notions derived from British criminal jurisprudence would be far outweighed by the "liabilities" incident thereto, in so far as it tended to affect the right of appeal. Where, therefore, through no fault of his a trial by Jury is imposed on an accused person in disregard of the express provisions of the statute which entitle him as of right to a trial with the aid of Assessors, it would be a manifest injustice to deprive him of a right of appeal which he would otherwise have had under the law. Such a result should be avoided by all means, unless of course this is necessitated by the constraining language of the Code. The words "where the trial was by Jury" in S. 418 (1), Cr. P. C., admit of two meanings and they must mean "where the trial in fact was by Jury," and "where trial was lawfully by Jury." S. 536, Cr. P. C., merely cures an admitted irregularity in procedure, but even so it says nothing as to whether a trial which should have been a trial with the aid of Assessors but was in fact held by a Jury should be deemed to have been held as a valid trial by Jury, or conversely whether a trial which should have been by Jury but was actually held with the aid of Assessors should be deemed a valid trial with Assessors. In any case S. 536 does not and cannot affect the right of appeal which is governed by S. 418 (1) read with S. 410. Where the trial ends in an acquittal, and there is or is not an appeal by the Local Government, there will be obviously no prejudice, and the trial may stand. But where it ends in a conviction, and the accused appeals, and the accused is sought to be shut out of an appeal on facts, he will certainly have been prejudiced and on a strict reading of S. 536 (1) the trial will be incurably bad. To render the trial valid in such a case, the right of appeal on facts would indeed have to be conceded. Prejudice may arise also in another way, where the Judge takes a view more favourable to the accused than the Jury but is unable to give effect to it because the trial is a trial by Jury. Per McNair, J.—The principle on which S. 418 is founded is that once the Jury have come to a decision on a question of fact, that decision is final and cannot be challenged either by the Judge of first instance or by the Judges in the Court of Appeal. In a trial with Assessors, the Judge is the Judge of fact, though his decision is aided by the expression of opinion of the Assessors, and his decision on questions of fact is liable to challenge. The accused has secured, as a result of being tried by a Jury when he ought to have been tried with the aid of Assessors, a privilege as valuable as if not more valuable than the right of appeal on facts. Goloke Behari Takal v. Emperor.

The rule 'hear the other side' audi alteram partem cannot be extended without qualification, to criminal appeals presented by a convict from jail under S. 420, Cr. P. C., The relevant provisions are contained in Ss. 419, 420 and 421, Cr. P. C. It is clear that the proviso to the last section deals with appeals presented under S. 419, and by the language used, the Legislature has expressly restricted the right of the appellant to be heard to cases under S. 419. By necessary implication the right to be heard under S. 420, Cr. P. C., has been denied though the inherent power of the Court to do justice by directing the accused to be produced before it for being heard upon his case, is not in any way limited. In spite of the restriction contained in the proviso to S. 421, wherever the Appellate Court considers it desirable that the accused should be heard, the Court has power to direct the production of the prisoner before it for disposing of the appeal. But it cannot be said that a convicted person presenting his appeal under S. 420 from jail has a right to be heard in person. Jalam Bharatsingh v. Emperor.

One of the fundamental principles of law is that no order should be passed to the detriment or prejudice of a party without giving him an opportunity of being heard in defence. When the Crown appears, it is undesirable to allow a complainant or any one else to appear as well. The principle applies with even greater force to appeals, especially when S. 422 does not require or even contemplate, the complainant's presence. It would be unfortunate to allow private passions and prejudices to creep into the conduct of a criminal trial, when it can be avoided. It would be even more undesirable to leave the matter in two sets of hands with a possible conflict of interest, undesirable generally from the broad view point of public policy, undesirable also because it would be unfair to the accused. Therefore, if the other side is properly represented by the Crown, not only has the complainant no right of audience but ordinarily he should not be allowed to appear at all. *Jalaluddin v. There is clearly a distinction between reversing a finding and merely altering it. Where an order of acquittal is to be converted into an order of conviction, it amounts to a reversal of the order. On the other hand where the conviction under one section is altered to a conviction under some other section maintaining the sentence or reducing it or altering it, it amounts merely to an alteration of the finding and not to reversal of the finding. S. 423 (1) is not applicable to a case where there is an express order of acquittal and no appeal from a conviction pending before the Appellate Court. In such a case the Appellate Court has no power to reverse the finding at all. It cannot by convicting the accused of the offence of which he has been acquitted reverse the finding by regarding it as if it were merely an alteration of the finding. When a person accused of two offences is acquitted of one offence but convicted of the other and there is no Government appeal, the Appellate Court cannot by convicting him of the offence of which he had been acquitted reverse the finding of the lower Court by regarding it as if it were merely an alteration of the finding. It may report the case to the High Court for proper orders if it considers the acquittal to be wrong. Sarda Prasad v. Emperor.

The considerations governing the appeal from the trial held with the aid of Assessors differ greatly from those governing an appeal from the trial by a Jury. In the latter case the appeal is restricted by the provisions of Ss. 423 (2) and 537, whereas in the former case, the whole case is before the Appellate Court. Champa Pasin v. Emperor.

An Appellate Court is not required to write a long and elaborate judgment, but it is clearly its duty, not only to examine the evidence, but also to write a judgment affording a clear indication that the appeal has been properly tried and that the points urged by the appellant have been duly considered and decided. An Appellate Court, which writes a judgment which a High Court is unable to follow without reference to the judgment of the trial Court, obviously fails in the discharge of the duty imposed upon it by the law. *Dalip Singh v. If the High Court finds in a case of trial by Jury that there is a misdirection, it has to examine the evidence to see whether the verdict was erroneous and has caused a failure of justice. If it cannot so find, it cannot interfere. One meaning of word 'erroneous' S. 423 (2), is that if the Court after examining the evidence finds that, even if the misdirection had not occurred, the Jury could not reasonably without being perverse or unduly foolish have come to any other decision it will not interfere. It is, however, clear from S. 423 (2), that even if there is a misdirection, the High Court is not entitled to alter or reverse the verdict or verdicts unless these verdict or verdicts are "erroneous" by reason of such misdirection and before the High Court interferes, it must also find that there has been a failure of justice under S. 537. *Arnold Monteath Mathews v. cheating—Revision—High Court, power of, to re-alter conviction.

An accused person was convicted of an offence under S. 205/109, Penal Code, but on appeal, the Sessions Judge altered the conviction to one under S. 419 of the Code. On revision, the High Court was of opinion that the offence was one under S. 205/109 and not under S. 419, Penal Code: Held, that the substitution of a conviction under S. 419 for one under S. 205/109 by the Sessions Judge did not amount to an acquittal of the accused with regard to the offence under the latter section and that S. 439 (4) of the Cr. P. C. was no bar to the High Court re-altering the conviction from one under S. 419 to one under S. 205/109, Penal Code. Ganpat Lal v. Emperor.

Such an error is one of form rather than of substance. The accused was convicted by the trial Court for theft of a tree under S. 379, Penal Code. The lower Appellate Court found that the accused bona fide believed the tree to be his own and set aside the conviction for theft but convicted the accused under S. 143, Penal Code, on the ground that he had gone with his men to the spot armed with lathis: Held, that the conviction was illegal inasmuch as the defences for the two charges must be distinct and the accused must be held to have been prejudiced by the alteration of the conviction to one under S. 143. *Dibakar Das v. It is not open to an Appellate Court, when setting aside the conviction of one of two or more offences, to confirm the sentence imposed by the trial Court, the reason being that when a single sentence is awarded for two offences, part of it must be deemed to have been incurred for the one offence and part for the other, so that to maintain the whole sentence for only one of the offences amounts to such an enhancement as is prohibited by S. 424 (1)(b). In applying that portion of S. 423 (1) (b), which allows an Appellate Court to alter the finding maintaining the sentence but not so as to enhance the same, the test of enhancement must be found not among the technicalities of penal definition, but by answering the broad question whether the Appellate Court has inflicted punishment more severe than that originally awarded. But when an Appellate Court, adopting the view taken by the Original Court as the act committed by the accused and only differing from it in its application of the law, alters a finding from a graver to a less grave offence, and maintains the same sentence as that of the trial Court, neither the letter nor the spirit of S. 423 is violated so as to constitute it an enhancement of punishment. In re : Ranga Swami Kanda Pillai.

S. 423—Duty of Appellate Court.

In a case of riot where a conflicting account of the occurrence is given by the prosecution and the defence and each party asserts that the opposite party was the aggressor, the Sessions Judge, in appeal, is bound to examine the evidence carefully so as to show that he is fully convinced on a consideration of the pros and cons of the case and the criticisms advanced on behalf of the defence that the account given by the prosecution is true and that the accused were the aggressors. *Jiwan Raut v. Where an accused was convicted by the lower Court and sentenced to undergo a period of imprisonment, and on appeal, there was a reduction in the period of imprisonment, but a fine was also imposed, and in default, a further period of imprisonment: Held by the Full Bench, that when the period of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine plus the period of imprisonment, left unaltered by the Appellate Court is to any extent less than the period of the original sentence, the fact that a fine is imposed by the Appellate Court would not in law amount to an enhancement of the sentence. As a general rule, a High Court is averse to interfere with an order of acquittal when it is moved by a private person to do so. It has, however, power to interfere in revision even when an appeal is not filed by the Local Government. But such interference should be exercised only in exceptional cases and with caution. It should be done only in cases where the alleged offence is of a serious character and the Court comes to the conclusion that there has been a miscarriage of justice, where, for instance, the Lower Court has misquoted the evidence, or where, having the evidence before it, which prima facie is reasonable and credible, the Lower Court gives no ground for rejecting it and does not satisfactorily review it. Where a conviction is set aside in appeal and in revision, the High Court comes to the conclusion that the order of acquittal of the lower Appellate Court cannot be maintained, the proper procedure is to set aside the order of acquittal and to direct a re-hearing of the appeal and not to order a re-trial of the entire case. *Bachha Singh v. ———S. 423—Re-trial—Serious mistake in charge—Failure to consider important evidence—Order for re-trial from framing of charge, propriety of—Accused, whether entitled to acquittal.

Where a Sessions Judge, finding that the accused had been prejudiced by a defect in the framing of the charge and by the omission of the trial Court to consider an important piece of documentary evidence adduced by the accused, remanded a case under S. 423 of the Cr. P. C., for re-trial from the stage at which it became irregular, namely, the framing of the charge, and the accused contended that they ought to have been acquitted under the circumstances: Held, that the order for re-trial was a fair one inasmuch as the proceedings had to be taken up only from after the drawing up of the charge, and thus no opportunity was given to the prosecution to improve their case. Sheoparsan Singh v. Emperor.

The petitioner was convicted in a trial by the Sessions Judge with a Jury on a verdict of guilty. On appeal the verdict of the Jury was set aside on the ground of irregularity and the following order was made by the High Court: "It will be open to the Crown to proceed further with the case, if it be so advised. We direct that until a fresh trial, if any, the accused be enlarged on bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate": Held, that the order of the High Court did not amount to an acquittal or discharge but to an order for re-trial, subject to the right of the Crown, if it thought fit, to withdraw the proceedings. Beni Madhub Kundu v. Emperor.

———S. 423—Re-trial, when can be ordered—Re-trial for supplying formal defects, propriety of.

A re-trial can be ordered by an Appellate Court under S. 423, Cr. P. C., for supplying formal defects. But where the prosecution has hopelessly broken down in every respect, a re-trial cannot be ordered so as to enable the prosecutor to substantiate some new charge against the accused, or to produce evidence which might easily have been produced at the first trial. *P. Per Sundara Aiyar, J.—An order for re-trial would be proper where the trial was illegal, irregular or defective, e. g., (1) where evidence was improperly rejected by the lower Court: (2) where the Court comes to the conclusion that the accused, rightly acquitted of one offence, ought to have been tried for another

When an Appellate Court passes order of remand under S. 423, Cr. P. In such a case, it is open to the accused person to adduce such additional evidence as he may desire. Mir Sarwarjan v. Emperor.

On appeal against a conviction by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate under Ss. 147 and 148 of the Penal Code, a Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and sentence and ordered a re-trial with a direction that the Magistrate should take further evidence and should record a fresh decision on the evidence already recorded and also on the additional evidence. After remand the Magistrate recorded additional evidence, but after considering the entire evidence on the record again convicted the accused and passed the same sentence as before. On appeal against the second conviction by the Magistrate, the Sessions Judge, at the request of both parties, discarded the additional evidence but confirmed the conviction on the evidence originally recorded: Held, per Chamier, C. J. That it was not necessary for the High Court to order a re-trial by the Magistrate even if the order of the Sessions Judge was not merely irregular but illegal. Ordinarily the proper course to take would have been to set aside all the proceedings subsequent to the alleged illegal order and to require the Sessions Judge to record a fresh

Where after consideration of the prosecution evidence, the trial Magistrate finds that the case against the accused is doubtful and acquits him, there is no jurisdiction for upsetting his decision in an appeal before the High Court. When the High Court is hearing a case as an appeal against an order of acquittal, certain points have to be kept in view. It cannot interfere unless it is satisfied that the view of the Trial Magistrate is wrong and contrary to the weight of evidence. The fact that it might have taken a different view if it had heard the case in the first instance, is no ground for interference in appeal. Emperor v. Sheo Sook Singh. 40 Cr. L. J. 772 :

Ss. 423, 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C. invest the High Court with power to be exercised when the Court thinks fit to correct errors in procedure committed by Subordinate Criminal Courts before the final order of acquittal or conviction is passed by such Subordinate Courts. At a joint trial of three accused persons, two were discharged and the third convicted. The conviction was upheld on appeal. The order of discharge was set aside, and further inquiry was directed to be made as regards the persons discharged. In the course of further inquiry, the Magistrate declined to record statement of the other accused who was convicted previously and tendered by the prosecution as their witness, the Magistrate being of opinion that his evidence would be inadmissible. On revision, the Chief Court set aside Magistrate's order on the ground that the evidence was not inadmissible and the postponement of the rectification of the error of the Magistrate may possibly lead to a considerable waste of a time or to a miscarriage of justice. *Crown v. ———Ss. 423, 439—Scope—High Court, if can make order for compensation even if when cause had been shown—High Court were of opinion that order for compensation should be made.

The High Court cannot under S. 439 read with S. 423 (1) (d) make an order for compensation even if upon the judgment and even if cause had been shown, High Court were of opinion that an order of compensation should be made. An order directing compensation to be paid is not a consequential or incidental order within the meaning of S. 423 (1) (d), nor can it be said that in revision the High Court makes an order consequential to an order of a Magistrate calling upon a complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation if it order compensation to be paid. Emperor v. Muhammad Alam.

In any case, an Appellate Court acting under S. 423 (d) could only deal with such an order simultaneously with the appeal pending before it and not by a separate proceeding initiated subsequent to the disposal of the appeal. The exercise of jurisdiction over such an order by any one Court acting under S. 423 (d) or S. 520, exhausts the control provided by those sections, and further revision can only be obtained under Chap. XXXII of the Code. Emperor v. Hussain Shah.

—S. 423—Re-trial—Power of Appellate Court to order on an appeal from conviction.

An accused person was convicted by a Magistrate of the first class under S. 420 of the I. P. C., and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two years. He appealed to the Court of Session against this conviction and sentence, and the Sessions Judge, being of opinion that, if the conviction was right, the sentence was inadequate, reversed the conviction and sentence without deciding the question whether the conviction was right or wrong, and ordered the appellant to be re-tried by the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate thereupon tried the accused and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for five years. The Appellate Court is not entitled in such a case to go into the facts and reverse the findings of the Jury even though a Criminal Revision Case has been filed by the Crown for enhancement of sentence calling upon the High Court to exercise its powers of revision under S. 439, Cr. On the date fixed for trial of a Sessions case, no witnesses for the prosecution were present and the hearing was adjourned to the next day. Again there were no witnesses present and the Judge refused to grant any further adjournment and called upon the accused to plead and empanelled a Jury. He then directed the Public Prosecutor to open the case, and the latter did so under protest and informed the Court that he had no witnesses present to support the case for the prosecution. Thereupon, the Judge directed the Jury to return a verdict of "not guilty" and after that verdict had been returned, acquitted the accused. On appeal: Held, (1) that the Judge had exercised his discretion unwisely both on the first and second day and that he should have ascertained the cause of the absence of the prosecution witnesses and should have granted a reasonable adjournment in order to enable them to be re-summoned: (2) that in the circumstances of the case, it was a misdirection for the Judge to tell the Jury that there was no evidence for the prosecution and direct them to return a verdict of "not guilty;" (3) that the verdict of the Jury and the order acquitting the accused must, therefore, be set aside under Sub-s. (2) of S. 423 of the Cr. P. C., and the accused must be re-tried. Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Sader Saik. 27 Cr. L. J. 125 : 91 I. C. 701 : 30 C. W. N. 190 : A. I. —Ss. 426, 497—Bail—Bail application rejected by Sessions Judge—Powers of High Court to grant—Respectability of accused and sufficiency of security, whether ground for granting bail.

The High Court has power to grant bail under S. 426 (2) of the Cr. P. C., after an application for the same made after a conviction by a Magistrate has been rejected by the Sessions Judge. But the Court will only interfere with the discretion exercised by the Sessions Judge in refusing bail if that discretion was manifestly wrong or if in fact no discretion has been exercised. The principle which should guide the High Court in dealing with such an application, is whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the applicant has committed the offence in question. Although the High Court has unfettered powers to grant bail, yet in exercising these powers the High Court ought to have regard to the limitations imposed on lower Courts in this connection. The mere previous respectability of a man is per se no sufficient reason for granting bail after he has been convicted of a criminal offence. The question of grant of bail is not only to be dealt with from the point of view of there being likelihood or not of the accused person absconding. Shaikh Karim v. Emperor.

———S. 423—'Right of reply' to Public Prosecutor.

There is nothing in S. 423, Cr. P. ———S. 423—Scope—Acquittal—Power of Appellate Court.

The powers of an Appellate Court are defined in S. 423, Cr. P. C., and in that section a clear distinction is drawn between the power which may be exercised in an appeal from an order of acquittal and in an appeal from a conviction. Darbari Mal v. Emperor. 12 Cr. L. J. 575 : 12 I. C. 839 : 8 A. L. J. 1129.

———S. 423—Scope—Alteration in charge.

It is not competent to an Appellate Court to alter a charge under S. 376 of the Penal Code to one under S. 346 of the Code, inasmuch as the charge under the latter section involves different elements and different questions of fact from a charge under S. 376. *C. ———S. 423—Scope—Consequential or incidental orders, meaning of.

Per Tek Chand, J.—Orders for disposal of property produced before a Criminal Court in the course of the trial are clearly "consequential or incidental orders" within the meaning of S. 423 (1) (d), Cr. ———S. 423—Scope.

Section 423 of Cr. P. C. must be read with S. 418, and where facts are in issue, the absolute finality of the verdict of a Jury on a question of fact must be given effect to. S. 423 applies to the case of a trial by Jury only in so far as to empower an Appellate Court to alter or reverse a verdict in the sense of preventing a conviction taking effect as the result of a misdirection. But an Appellate Court cannot substitute its own verdict for that of the Jury. Ikrāmuddin v. Emperor. 18 Cr. L. J. 491 : 39 I. C. 331 : 15 A. L. J. 205 : 39 All. 348 : A. I. R. 1917 All. 173.

———S. 423—Scope.

S. 423 (2) of the Cr. P. C. only applies where it becomes necessary to consider whether the verdict of a Jury was erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge. It does not narrow down the scope of S. 418 of the Code which allows an appeal in a Jury trial on a question of law. Where there has been no trial in fact, owing to the fact that the trial which was held was illegal, the trial must be set aside for that reason only and no question —Ss. 424, 367—Duty of Appellate Court.

It would be well for District Magistrates who hear appeals in criminal cases to bear in mind that they are also subordinate to higher Courts and it is their duty to satisfy the higher Courts by their judgments that they have applied their minds to the case before them. and in recording a finding of conviction upon the evidence produced before them, have arrived at a correct conclusion. In order to discharge this duty, it is necessary for them to see that their judgments fulfil the requirements laid down by the law. Merely saying that all the points arising in the case have been considered by the Court below and have been rightly decided, does not show that the Appellate Court has applied its mind to the points arising in the case and has arrived at its own independent judgment in respect of them as it is required by the law to do. Bansidhar v. Emperor.

S. 424 of the Cr. P. C. requires that a judgment, whether it be under S. 421 or under S. 423, should be written by an Appellate Court in accordance with the rules laid down in Chap. XVI, including S. 367 of the Code, for the recording of a judgment. When the order of an Appellate Court is liable to revision by the High Court, the former Court should give some reason for dismissing an appeal to show that the points raised in the appeal were properly considered by it. *Talabar v. S. 250—Record of reasons—Necessity of—Merely saying that case is false, not enough.

It is the duty of the Magistrate ordering compensation to be paid to the accused under S. 250 to record his reasons for passing such an order. Merely to say that the case is false or that the explanation is not satisfactory, does not give the revisional Court sufficient grounds for finding whether there are good grounds for the order of compensation or not. An order for compensation passed without recording reasons for passing it, is illegal owing to non-compliance with the provisions of S. 250 and should be set aside in revision. *Bhagwandin v. —Ss. 435, 439—Acquittal—Revision by private complainant—Interference.

Per Young, C. J. and Blacker, J.—It is open to the High Court to set aside an order of acquittal at the instance of any party other than Government coming to the High Court in appeal under S. 417, and a private complainant has locus standi in such proceedings. No distinction can be made between a petition for revision by a private complainant and a case reported by a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate. Interference by High Court is not limited to cases, where there has been an error of law or apparent injustice resulting in misappreciation or misapprehension of a legal principle except that the High Court cannot convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. *Sham Lal v. sparingly and only where it is urgently demanded in the interests of justice. The power of a Court to stop a case if it thinks it a waste of time to go on with it is undoubted and, therefore, where in a Sessions case two of the important witnesses for the prosecution were disbelieved by the Judge and the Assessors and the prosecution was stopped, there was no such patent miscarriage of justice as to call for interference by the High Court. It is very doubtful if a private party should, as a matter of right, be allowed to move the High Court in such cases. In re : Natesa Padayachi. 16 Cr. L. J. 558 : 29 I. C. 830 : 17 M. L. —Ss. 428, 537—Grounds—Further evidence in appeal—Appellate Court acting upon admission of Pleader—Mere irregularity—Admission of Pleader in criminal cases—Evidence Act (I of 1872), S. 58.

In a case under S. 43 (1) (a) of the Bombay Abkari Act, the question whether the report of an Excise Analyst which was admitted in evidence in the trial Court without any objection, was really admissible or not was raised in appeal. When the Appellate Court proposed to have the Analyst examined under S. 428, Cr. P. C., the accused's Pleader stated that he did not want to challenge the correctness of the certificate and that he was prepared to admit that the bottle sent to the Analyst contained cocaine. The Pleader further stated that it was unnecessary to examine the Analyst and that the case may be decided on the merits. Upon this the Sessions Judge found that the bottle contained cocaine and convicted the accused. In revision: Held, that the Sessions Judge was justified in acting upon the admission of the —S. 428—Scope—Word 'necessary', meaning of—Section if confined to prosecution evidence or absence of evidence on formal point—Re-trial or taking fresh evidence.

S. 428, Cr. P. C., which enables an Appellate Court to call for additional evidence is not rendered inapplicable merely because it is not the Court but, the accused that considers such evidence to be necessary. Neither is the section confined in its operation to cases of absence of evidence on some formal point such as a sanction, nor only to evidence for the prosecution. Where all the necessary evidence is not before the Appellate Court, whether the proper course in any particular case is to order a re-trial or merely direct further evidence to be taken under S. 428, Cr. P. C., is a matter of discretion of the Court, apart from what the accused or the prosecution may desire. Where the evidence not taken by the First Court on accused's behalf is so extensive or so directly bearing on the main issues in the case, the Appellate Court may order a re-trial: but where such evidence on a broad view of the case is comparatively unimportant or would have been of no assistance to the defence, the Court would merely direct additional evidence to be taken. Where the accused strongly protests against additional evidence to be taken, he cannot be allowed merely to use the irregularity in procedure of the First Court in not taking all the evidence, in order to obtain a re-trial of the case. In re; Narayana Menon.

25 Cr. L. J. 401 :
77 I. C. 481 : A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 106.

—Ss. 428, 439—Scope—Appeal—Additional evidence, when can be admitted—Power of Court, scope of—Admission of additional evidence—Revision—Interference by High Court, when justified.

The scope of S. 428 of the Cr. P. C. is prima facie not limited by any consideration save that the Appellate Court should be of opinion that additional evidence is necessary and should record its reasons for such opinion. The object of the section is just as much the prevention of the escape of a guilty person through some carelessness or ignorant procedure of the prosecutor or the Magistrate, as the vindication of the innocent of a person wrongfully accused where the same carelessness or ignorance has omitted to bring on the record circumstances essential to the elucidation of truth. In India the onus is placed on the Court not merely to listen to the evidence but to inquire to the utmost into the truth of the matter and secure justice. Accordingly if any restriction is to be placed upon the power conferred on an Appellate Court by S. 428 of the Cr. P. C., it cannot be that negligence or inadvertence on the part of the prosecution is to be allowed to effect a miscarriage of justice; on the contrary, the section is directed to the attainment of justice even at a late stage in the proceedings, by the introduction of further materials which the Court judges to be essential to a just decision of the case. The powers given by

S. 428 of the Cr. P. C. to a Criminal Court are not less than are given to a Civil Court in the matter of admission of evidence at the appellate stage and Courts ought not to circumscribe them where the Legislature has not seen fit to do so. Even where it might itself in the exercise of its discretion as an Appellate Court have declined to admit additional evidence, the Court of revision will by no means always interfere with an order of the Appellate Court admitting additional evidence. To justify interference in revision in such a case the Court must be satisfied that the Appellate Court committed an error of law which has prejudiced the accused on the merits. Akhtar Hussain v. Emperor.

Under S. 250, before ordering any person to pay compensation, the Magistrate must call upon him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation and the Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which the complainant or informant may show. Where the Magistrate does not record any statement made by the complainant as showing cause against his being ordered to pay compensation, but in his order he states the points that he raised, that is not sufficient. The Magistrate must record the words used by the complainant when showing cause unless of course complainant chooses to put his reasons into writing. If this is done, and the writing is filed, it would obviously be unnecessary for the Magistrate to record it again, and filing the written submission would, in effect, be reording the cause shown. The term "owner of land" as defined in S. 3, Sub-s. (32), Calcutta Municipal Act, includes the landlord. The duty of removing a building which comes within the terms of S. 343 after notice has been served, falls clearly, amongst others, on the landlord. Under S. 343, Calcutta Municipal Act, the person who is the owner of the land, having had a notice served upon him, is liable to comply with the terms thereof. S. 442, Calcutta Municipal Act, does not, in any manner, abridge the power that is conferred by S. 343. S. 442, Calcutta Municipal Act, provides that if the Chairman considers a building to be in so dangerous a state as to render immediate steps necessary for the safety of the public, he is to take those steps and then to serve notices on the owner and occupier. This section contemplates a case of much greater urgency than S. 343 does, and in no way limits the powers of the Chairman under the latter section. Corporation of Calcutta v. Mammoth Nath Set.

A complaint having been lodged against eight persons, the Magistrate tried five of them, the other three having absconded. At a later stage, however, they surrendered but they were not put on their trial. Having considered all the evidence for the prosecution, the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the complainant had failed to establish the charge against the accused, and after acquitting the five accused on their trial, he asked for orders from the District Magistrate as to whether the prosecution should be continued against the other three. The District Magistrate though of the opinion that the evidence against them being the same as that produced against the other accused, the prosecution could not succeed, nevertheless ordered the continuance of proceedings against them directing the transfer of the case to another Magistrate for trial: Held, that the High Court was competent to interfere in the matter under S. 435 and that having regard to the judgment of the trial Magistrate and to the observations of the District Magistrate, the prosecution of the applicants should not be proceeded with as no useful object could be served thereby. *Jai Narain Lal v. Upon a complaint by the father for delivery of his daughter who was in wrongful confinement of certain person to the custody of her mother, the Court passed the orders accordingly. It, however, transpired that the girl was already married and proceedings under S. 215 were started against the father. No sentence was passed, production of the girl was ordered and she was handed over to her husband. The order was set aside by the District Magistrate in revision and it was ordered that the girl should remain in her mother's custody : Held, that under S. 435 it was open to the complainant, to make an application in revision against the order of the Special Magistrate before the District Magistrate. If, however, the District Magistrate decided, upon a consideration of the application and examination of the record, that the order of the Special Magistrate was unjust, then he could only act under S. 438. Under this section all that the District Magistrate can do is to refer the matter to the High Court with his recommendation. The District Magistrate's powers under S. 438, refer to sentences imposed against the applicant before him. The District Magistrate, however, can only act under S. 552, where there is a complaint before him on oath of the abduction or unlawful detention of a woman or of a female under the age of 16 years. Hence, in the absence of these requisites, the order of the Magistrate was without jurisdiction. Moti v. Beni.

an accused with an offence, although no appeal lies in respect of the order. Very wide powers of revision are conferred on High Courts under S. 439 and it is with particular reference to non-appealable orders that High Courts are empowered to act as Courts of Revision. The High Court can, with reference to any particular order (whether appealable or not) exercise all or any of the powers which, under S. 423, an Appellate Court could exercise if that order happened to be one open to appeal. —S. 435—Power of High Court, whether limited.

In a criminal revision the High Court will not look into the evidence at all, unless the applicant in revision can make out that a special occasion has arisen which requires the Court to look into the evidence. Such an occasion may be made out either from the way in which the trial has been conducted in the First Court or in the Court of First Appeal; or upon a perusal of the judgment of either Court on its face; or from the omission of the lower Court to consider some outstanding circumstance in the case from erroneous statements in the judgment. Where an occasion for enquiring into the evidence has been made out, it is the duty of the High Court to examine the entire facts of the case. After such an examination the Court will not interfere as lightly as it would if it was a matter of appeal and not revision. The distinction may be a fine one but it is a distinction, the distinction being that in disposing of a criminal appeal the Court will interfere unless it is affirmatively satisfied as to the guilt of the appellant, while in revision the Court will not interfere unless the conscience of the Court is aroused to such an extent as to compel the Court to expressly say that the applicant ought not to have been convicted on the evidence. The High Court is not debarred in revision from entering into a discussion of, and looking into, the evidence and the facts in order to find out if there has been a miscarriage of justice and from interfering with the finding of lower Courts on facts, if the ends of justice so require, S. 439 read with S. 435 clearly gives power to the High Court to go into the facts and set aside the finding, sentence, or order of any Court if it is incorrect on merits, the new provisions having expressly widened the power of the High Court. *Ram Kishun Misser v. It is not open to the Judicial Commissioner's Court under S. 439 to alter or interfere with a conviction which has been arrived at by a Judge of the Court as Ss. 435 to 439 clearly contemplate interference only with the finding, sentences or orders of any inferior Court. Where, however, a Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court hearing an appeal against a conviction, alters the conviction to one for a graver offence, but does not himself enhance the sentence, but suggests an action in that behalf by the Local Government, his judgment is not final from that point of view and the Judicial Commissioner's Court does not become functus officio and is competent to hear application on behalf of the Local Government for enhancement of the sentence. *Local Government v. It is the practice of the High Court not to interfere in revision with a finding of fact unless there are special reasons. Accordingly in cases in which the law allows no appeal, the High Court as a Court of Revision does not, except on the ground of an error of law, or where the question is one of evidence, on exceptional grounds, exercise the power of an Appellate Court. But where such exceptional grounds exist, the Court will exercise its discretion under S. 439 and reverse the conviction and sentence. There is nothing in the Statute Law which precludes the High Court from interfering in the exercise of its revisional powers, with conviction and sentences whether the ground of that interference be what is commonly called a question of fact or whether it be a question of law. The cursus curiæ, drawing a distinction between grounds of the former and the grounds of the latter sort rests rather upon a principle of convenience than of law. The true rule is

The duty of supervising the subordinate Courts is laid upon the High Court, and for that purpose, statements of cases decided by them are periodically submitted to it. The High Court is not only authorised, but bound to see that justice is properly administered, and it is its duty to interfere in a case which comes to its notice, in which it is of opinion that a miscarriage of justice has occurred. It is only cases in which there has been an acquittal after a complete trial that the High Court will not interfere, as a general rule, unless on appeal by the Local Government. In other cases, the High Court acts constantly on its own initiative as well as on the motion of parties of the Sessions Court and of the District Magistrate. It is in the interests of the right administration of justice that it should do so. Emperor v. Kyaw Zan Hla.

A High Court has jurisdiction to interfere at any stage of the proceedings if it considers that, in the interests of justice, it should do so. Before an offence under S. 189, Penal Code, can be made out, it must be shown that there was a threat of injury to a public servant for the purpose of inducing him to do any act or forbear or delay to do any act connected with the exercise of his public functions. The mere fact that the accused abused the process-server will not constitute an offence under S. 189, Penal Code, nor will it constitute an offence under S. 504, Penal Code, without an intention to cause a breach of the peace or knowledge that a breach of the peace is likely to result. Service of summons is complete when it is tendered to the witness and his refusal to sign the original makes no difference. —S. 436—Further inquiry.

Before ordering further enquiry, it is necessary that the Magistrate should not be satisfied with the 'correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order', and it is then his duty to exercise the discretion he possesses under S. 436 and to order that further enquiry be made into the complaint that had been dismissed. *Maung Su v. A District Magistrate or a Sessions Judge has power to order a further inquiry under S. 436 even when the Magistrate has recorded all the evidence for the prosecution. Where a Sessions Judge after going carefully through the evidence comes to the conclusion that the finding of the Magistrate is either perverse or manifestly at variance with the evidence which he had recorded, and makes an order for further inquiry under S. 436, the order directing a further inquiry is not illegal, improper and incorrect and cannot be interfered with in revision. *Karkley v. —S. 436—Further inquiry—Further enquiry after discharge, when to be ordered.

The rule of law is firmly established that generally speaking, further enquiry after discharge is improper unless the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish or is based upon a record of evidence which is obviously incomplete. Where the prosecution produced seven witnesses and closed their case and the Magistrate having considered the evidence discharged the accused: Held, that a further enquiry could not be ordered on the mere ground that the prosecution did not choose to produce a particular piece of evidence. *Atma Singh v. —S. 436—Further inquiry—Further inquiry, when to be ordered.

Where the whole evidence has been heard by a Magistrate hearing the case and has been disbelieved, a revising authority would not lightly interfere with the order of the Magistrate. The provisions of S. 436 of the Cr. P. C., are meant to apply to cases where there have been some misinterpretation of the law or principle of law, or there has otherwise been miscarriage of justice. The mere fact that on the evidence a revising authority comes to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the Court that heard the evidence, does not justify an order for further inquiry. Zabar Singh v. Ram Sarup.

The High Court has jurisdiction in review to interfere with an order of discharge passed upon an application made by the Public Prosecutor under the provision of S. 494.

Under the very terms of Ss. 436 and 437, the High Court has power to order a further enquiry in a case in which an accused person has been discharged. Devendra Kumar Roy v. Bakht Chaudhury. (S. B.)

———S. 436—Order of discharge—Revision by District Magistrate—Committal to Court of Session on grounds of expediency—Illegality.

A District Magistrate, acting under S. 436 set aside an order of discharge of a Police Officer on a charge of extortion, on the ground that the charge related to the conduct of a Police Officer and that it was desirable that the case should be tried by the Court of Session: Held, that it was incumbent on the District Magistrate to record his own finding on the evidence before committing the case to the Court of Session and that the gravity of the charge was not a sufficient reason for interfering with the lower Court's order of discharge. *Srikishen Lal v. ———S. 436—Order of discharge—Order of discharge, when can be set aside on ground of misappreciation of evidence—Distinction between S. 436 and S. 437, in this matter.

It is both legal and proper for a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate to set aside an order of discharge under S. 436, on the ground of misappreciation of evidence. It is, strictly speaking, legal for a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate to do so on the ground of misappreciation of evidence, but it is not proper to do so unless he is clearly of opinion that the misappreciation is so flagrant that in effect the order is perverse or manifestly unreasonable or foolish or prima facie incorrect. Where exactly to draw the line is a matter for the exercise of common-sense. In the application of these principles, there is no practical difference between S. 436 and S. 437, Cr. P. C. Sheoprasad v. Emperor.

———S. 436—Order of discharge—Public Prosecutor withdrawing case—Discharge of accused, nature of—District Magistrate's power to order further enquiry.

S. 436 confers an independent power on the District Magistrate to direct any subordinate Magistrate to make further enquiry into any complaint which has been dismissed, or into the case of any person accused of an offence who has been discharged. An order of discharge passed on withdrawal of a case before charge is framed does not amount to an acquittal. S. 250—Revision—Revision from order of City Magistrate.

The High Court at Allahabad has jurisdiction to entertain an application for revision of an order of the City Magistrate of Lucknow in a case in which the complainant is a European British subject, irrespective of whether he has made a claim to be dealt with as such, against whom an order under

S. 250 has been made. Harris v. Peel.

can be passed not only in summons cases
but also in warrant cases. Paghambar v. Emperor.

S. 250—Scope—Compensation—Order to prosecute under S. 476—Complaint, what is.

In execution of a decree, a warrant of attachment was issued and the bailiff reported to the Court that he had been obstructed in levying attachment by one Ishram. The decree-holder also applied for sanction to prosecute Ishram. On inquiry, the Court did not issue a sanction but made an order under

S. 476, Cr. P. C. for Ishram's prosecution and sent the papers to a Magistrate. The Magistrate acquitted Ishram and ordered the decree-holder under S. 250, Cr. P. C. to pay Rs. 30 in compensation; Held, (1) that the words of S. 250 limited it to a case instituted either by complaint, or by the information given to a Police Officer, or to a Magistrate;

(2) that the order could not be supported under S. 250, as the accusation against Ishram was not made upon the complaint or information of any person within the meaning of

S. 250, but upon the order made by the Court under S. 476. 'Complaint' as defined in Cl. (h) of S. 4 of the Cr. P. C. cannot include deposition made to a Magistrate in the course of a trial. In re: Kishandas Harichand.

S. 250—Scope—Institution of case originally upon information given to Police.

Where a case was instituted upon a Police report, but originally upon information given to a Police Officer: Held, that the case falls within S. 250 and that the person upon whose may be dealt with under that section. Jogdandi Pershad Singh v. Mahadeo Kandoo.

S. 250—'Vexatious' case, meaning of—Acquittal—Compensation.

An accusation cannot be said to be vexatious unless the main intention of the complainant is to cause annoyance to the person accused and not merely to further the ends of justice.
Where a report regarding the conduct of the accused, a Municipal Supervisor, was made by the Municipal Engineer, on which the President set a more or less informal inquiry on foot through the Police, and the report of the Police showed that the Supervisor had been guilty of falsification of accounts but the accused was acquitted on trial, it cannot be said under the circumstances that the object in instituting the proceedings was primarily to annoy the accused. Municipal Committee, Simla v. Munkand Singh.
27 Cr. L. J. 607;
94 I. C. 271; A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 365.

S. 250—Vexatious charge—Compensation.

The expression 'vexatious charge' in S. 250
is sufficiently wide to include a false charge, and compensation may be awarded to an accused when the accusation against him was deliberately false. Bhindsri v. Emperor.
1 Cr. L. J. 433;
1 A. L. J. 234; 24 A. W. N. 116;
I. L. R. 26 All. 512.

S. 250—Vexatious charge—Falsity of charge, whether must be established.

In order to justify an order for payment of compensation to the accused person under S. 250, there must be a finding that the charge against the accused is false, besides being frivolous or vexatious. A vexatious charge may be partly true and the idea conveyed by the word is that the object of the person making the accusation should be primarily to harass the accused person. Bhan v. Syed Chand.
26 Cr. L. J. 1033;
87 I. C. 921; A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 31.

S. 250—Vexatious complaint—Evidence not produced—Compensation.

A person who files a complaint against another person, gets a warrant issued for his arrest, puts him to the inconvenience of attending the Court, compels him to execute a bond for his attendance and then having attained his object of harassing him, calmly says that the case might be filed as he does not wish to produce evidence, has no right to complain if the Magistrate holding that his complaint was vexatious, makes an order for compensation against him under S. 250. A man cannot be allowed to make use of the Court for the purpose of annoying some one against whom he has a grudge. Channan Singh v. Emperor.

The Magistrate made an enquiry and submitted a return adverse to the accused. The District Magistrate, however, without examining the complainant or taking any evidence for the prosecution held the charge false upon the police papers and the record of the local enquiry and discharged the accused under S. 253. The Sessions Judge on application under S. 437 set aside the order of discharge and directed the District Magistrate to make further inquiry into the case. On revision in the Chief Court it was contended on behalf of the accused that the District Magistrate having acted under S. 30 as a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Sessions Judge the latter Court had no jurisdiction to revise the order of the discharge and that the order of discharge was a proper one : Held, overruling the contentions, that the Sessions Judge was competent to revise the order of the District Magistrate under S. 437 and that the order passed by the Sessions Judge was right. *Jaloo v. An order under S. 436 for further enquiry into a complaint dismissed under S. 203 is not bad for want of notice to the accused. An accused person is said to be discharged when the case against him is thrown out under Ss. 209, 223, 259 or when the Advocate-General enters a nolle prosequi under S. 333 of the Cr. P. C. The expression "person who has been discharged" in S. 436 refers to "a person who has been discharged" under Ss. 209, 253 or 259. A person against whom no process has been issued under S. 203 is not a discharged person and therefore, no notice is necessary to him when the District Magistrate or the Sessions Court or the High Court directs further enquiry into a complaint dismissed under S. 203 or Sub-s. The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in a proceeding pending before a Magistrate in the exercise of its revisional powers and to pass an order of discharge in favour of the accused person if it considers such an order to be in the interests of justice. When a Magistrate has passed an order discharging an accused person, it is competent to the same Magistrate or to another Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction to take fresh proceedings against the accused upon the same facts, although the order of discharge has not been set aside by a higher authority. Such a re-trial, however, should only be allowed under very special circumstances, and where such circumstances do not exist, it is improper to allow the accused to be re-tried on the same charge. *Gopal Das v. He can order, if he so wishes, on proper grounds, under S. 436, a further inquiry into the complaint, but it is reserved to the High Court in S. 436, to use any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal, which would include the right of ordering a re-trial. *Mohammad Husain v. S. 436 which empowers the High Court, the Sessions Judge, or the District Magistrate, to direct further enquiry into a complaint dismissed under S. 203 or S. 204 does not lay down any rule that further enquiry should only be directed when it is found that the judgment is perverse or foolish, though, as a rule of prudence, the Superior Court should not lightly discard the estimate of evidence appraised by the Court which heard it and should not set aside the dismissal of a complaint simply because a different view of the evidence might be taken. An order for further enquiry directed to a Subordinate Court means that the case should be taken up again and that the question of dismissing the complaint or charging the accused, should be again considered and an appropriate order made as a result of such fresh consideration. *Radha Prasad Bhagat v. This section relates only to the special case for which it provides. The District Magistrate who acts under its terms, must do so on examining a record; and, when he himself makes further inquiry, he does so not in exercise of any of the powers conferred by S. 190. A complaint was dismissed by the Township Magistrate of a District. A fresh complaint on the same facts was presented to another Magistrate at the Headquarters of the District who sent it for disposal to the Township Magistrate, pointing out that the previous complaint had been dismissed under a misconception of the law. The Township Magistrate tried and convicted the accused. An appeal was made to the Court of Session, which reversed the conviction on the ground that the dismissal of the first complaint debarred the Magistrate from taking cognizance of the second: Held, that the Sessions Judge was wrong. Emperor v. Nga Pyu Di.

The Cr. P. C. does not require notice to be given to an accused person before a further inquiry is ordered under S. 437. It is a matter dependent on the circumstances of each case. It is true that S. 437, does not compel a Magistrate to issue notice, and an order passed under that section without having issued notice is not illegal. But it is a fundamental principle of the administration of English justice that no order to the prejudice of an accused person should ordinarily be made without giving him an opportunity of being heard in his defence. And the mere omission from the section of any direct and positive command to give an invariable effect to that principle was never meant to absolve a Magistrate from doing so in all ordinary cases. In re : Mukund Bhaskarshet.

The correct principle is that where the Code is silent, it is a matter of judicial discretion dependent on the circumstances of each case whether a Court should pass any order to the prejudice of a man in a criminal case without giving him a hearing : Held also, that in the present case the District Magistrate would have exercised his discretion more soundly if he had heard the accused before passing his order, and satisfied himself whether there were sufficient grounds for setting aside the order of discharge. In re : Ruamani Bhogilal.

Generally speaking further inquiry after discharge is improper unless the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish or is based upon a record of evidence which is obviously incomplete. It is not sufficient for a Court of Revision to merely say that the Trial Judge has not gone fully into the case and to declare that further inquiry is necessary. Before ordering further inquiry, the Court should state in what respect the Trial Judge's conclusions are either foolish or perverse or otherwise unsatisfactory, and if the case is sent back on the ground that the decision of the Trial Court has been arrived at upon an incomplete record, this should be stated. There is no provision in the Cr. P. C., under which a notice issued to an accused can be validly served upon him through his agent. Sawan Singh v. Emperor, 26 Cr. L. J. 1393 :

It is not desirable that the District Magistrate should exercise the power of revision arbitrarily or harshly in such cases, but under the safeguards provided by S. 437. If further evidence is forthcoming, it may just as well be taken and considered in the same proceedings instead of waiting until further information is laid. This constitutes "further inquiry" contemplated by that section, and a necessary ingredient is that fresh evidence is forthcoming on the part of the prosecution. That another Magistrate should hear and decide the matter on the same evidence is not what is contemplated. Manna v. Emperor, 1 Cr. L. J. 96 :

It is not ordinarily desirable that in ordering further enquiry under S. 437, a detailed examination of the evidence and elaborate reasons should be given, but enough should be said in the way of reasons to indicate to the Court below in what manner it is thought that its order was incorrect, whether on a point of law or in misappreciation of the weight of the evidence or for want of a complete enquiry. *Nga Min Din v. Nothing in S. 437 requires previous notice to any accused person who has been discharged before further inquiry into his case is ordered by a competent authority, that is to say, by the High Court, the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate. Nevertheless as a matter of judicial discretion, it is advisable that previous notice should issue when the matter for consideration is the setting aside of an order of discharge passed in favour of an accused person who has actually been before a Court to answer the facts alleged against him. The fact of a person's being in the position of an accused with another during an inquiry which resulted in the order of discharge, should not at all prevent his being summoned as a witness in the further inquiry ordered. *Abdul Latif v. The power conferred by S. 437 to direct a further enquiry should be used sparingly and with great caution. Though it is not illegal to make an order directing further enquiry under S. 437, without notice to the accused, it is always desirable that notice should be given. The ordinary rule is that no order should be passed against an accused without notice to him. Mi The Kin v. Nga E Tha. 1 Cr. L. J. 867 :
 U. B. R. 1904 Cr. Pro. 19.

—S. 437—Further inquiry—Validity of.

The essential matter for consideration in setting aside an order of discharge and directing a further inquiry under S. 437, is the prospect of any public advantage from the case being re-opened. Where there is no such prospect, by reason of the comparatively insignificant character of the offence, of the considerable time which has elapsed since its commission and of the evidence being of no special strength, an order directing further inquiry would be without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside by the High Court in revision. In re : Krishna Pillai.

The High Court would not permit a manifestly erroneous acquittal induced by inadvertence to stand even where a reference to the High Court is made by the District Magistrate. A reference by a Sessions Judge in a case of acquittal does not stand on the same footing as a reference by a District Magistrate as the former has no means of communicating with the Local Government with a view to an appeal under S. 417, Cr. P. C., and must either act under S. 438, Cr. P. C., or not at all. Wazir Kunjra v. Emperor. 30 Cr. L. J. 673 :

Held, that the powers given to a District Magistrate to make a reference to the High Court relate to proceedings before an inferior Court, and do not empower him to question the propriety of a judgment or sentence passed by a superior criminal authority as the Sessions Judge. In cases where he feels it necessary to question the adequacy of sentence by a superior Court, he should not instruct but inform the Public Prosecutor who might, after receiving proper instructions from the Local Government, lay the matter before the High Court on his own initiative. Though under S. 432, Cr. P. That would be opposed to the plain sense of the section, the object of which is that such evidence as is ready and appears against the accused shall be taken directly he appears in Court. If the case is initiated on a challan, the accused is produced, and the prosecution witnesses on the day fixed, the prosecution witnesses who have been bound over to appear by the Police are then examined. If it is necessary to adjourn the case, such witnesses still come under the category of "such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution", as they were produced on the date of hearing; but where the case is initiated on a complaint, the phrase "such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution" refers only to such witnesses as the complainant may bring with him and who have not been summoned by the Court. Rahat Ali v. Muhammad Murad.

What the second part of S. 252 authorizes is what is done in every complaint case under another name, the filing of a list of witnesses whom the complainant desires shall be summoned. It follows, then, that after the first stage contemplated in the first part of S. 252 has passed, the hearing of any unsummoned witnesses after that date is a matter within the Court's discretion. The fact that the Magistrate summonses all the witnesses without making a selection or enquiring from the complainant broadly on the points in respect of which they were to depose does not alter the fact that the acceptance of the list filed by the complainant in its entirety is a compliance with the second part of the section. It is only where a list is unduly long and appears to have been filed vexatiously that the magistracy avail themselves of the power, which the law provides, to scrutinize the list to prevent undue harassment of the accused and an unwarranted prolongation of the trial. Rahat Ali v. Muhammad Murad.

No hard and fast rule should be laid down that applications made to the High Court by complainants for setting aside acquittals of persons who have been charged with the commission of offences are to be discouraged, as that would result in the High Court abdicating its functions and, in the present conditions of India, in denial of justice. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 439 —High Court's power to alter conviction to one under S. 302.

For purposes of S. 439, Cr. P. C., acquittal means a complete acquittal, and discharge on all the allegations and facts charged and not an acquittal on one charge and a conviction on another. Therefore, where an accused is charged under S. 302, Penal Code, but is convicted under S. 304, Penal Code, the High Court is competent in revision to alter the conviction from one under S. 304 to one under S. 302, Penal Code. *Fazal Khan v. In private prosecution where the Crown does not think it proper to move against the order of acquittal, the High Court should not ordinarily interfere; but it does so only when it is satisfied that there has been an error of law committed by the acquitting Court or where there has been a gross miscarriage of justice or in public interest. *Basirula v. —Ss. 439, 417—Acquittal, revision against—Procedure.

The proper method of setting aside an acquittal is to move the District Magistrate to move the Local Government to appeal under S. 417, Cr. P. C. If the Magistrate in the proper exercise of his discretion or even merely because he is really not interested in a private dispute or a private injury, refuses to do so, the private party can move the High Court in revision. Ordinarily the High Court will not interfere in revision against an order of acquittal. But it has frequently done so in suitable cases. Harbans v. Emperor.

S. 439—Acquittal—Revision.

High Court will not entertain any application for revision against an order of acquittal made by a private individual unless there exist certain circumstances, which make it imperative in the interest of public justice for the High Court to set aside an order of acquittal which is manifestly perverse and unjust. Manila Bakhsh v. Riaz Ahmad.

S. 439—Acquittal—Interference in revision.

The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere with acquittals in revision, though this is not encouraged, and where serious injustice has been caused by an error of law, the High Court should interfere. Emperor v. Datta Ram.

S. 439—Acquittal—Interference.

The powers of the High Court in criminal revision are not intended for the gratification of private malice, nor are they to be used to vindicate the position of a private prosecutor where a merely technical offence has been committed, however, clearly that technical offence may have been proved. Narayan Malharana v. Emperor.

S. 439—Acquittal—Revision—High Court, power of.

The High Court can no doubt revise orders of acquittal, but the power of reversing acquittals is one that will only be used sparingly and when the interests of public justice demand. It is in very exceptional cases that acquittals are set aside in revision on the application of private persons. Khem Chand v. Lahu.

Generally the Chief Court will not interfere on the revision side when the Original and the Appellate Courts are agreed in their finding on facts. But when it appears that the Courts have shown a great tendency to treat mere interferences and probabilities as proof, and evidence has not been properly weighed, the Chief Court will interfere in the interests of justice. *Hira Singh v. ———S. 439—Conviction—Practice—Summary rejection of an appeal by the Sessions Judge—Revision of the Judge's order—High Court's practice where evidence found insufficient—Circumstantial evidence—Suspicion—Subsequent conduct of the accused confirming suspicion.

On an application to the High Court to set aside an order of the Sessions Judge summarily dismissing an appeal which the applicants preferred from an order of the Magistrate convicting them of an offence under the Penal Code, the High Court finding that the evidence on which the conviction was based was insufficient, instead of remanding the appeal for a hearing on its merits set aside the conviction and sentence and acquitted and discharged the accused. One G, a servant of the complainant, deposited for safe custody a sum of money with I (one of the accused) who put it into a box, locked it and kept the key with himself. The other accused (C) used the box as a bed during the greater part of the night and the next morning the lock was found to have been forced and the money was missing. Neither I nor C was in continuous possession of the box from the time the money was put into it to the time that it was missed. It was found by the Magistrate that the accused set up a false story to account for the loss of the money and the evidence showed that the accused had opportunities to take away the money unnoticed. On a charge on these facts against the accused under Ss. 106 and 406/109, Penal Code, with respect to the money lost : Held, that these facts could not support a conviction. In a case of this kind where there is no eye-witness and where the stolen property has not been found, the possibility of any other person being a culprit must be excluded before the accused can be convicted. Iswar Chandra Das v. Emperor.

———S. 439—Conviction—Summonses and warrants, execution of—Court, duty of—Conviction without hearing defence witness, illegality of—Revision.

It is the business of a Court to see that its summonses and warrants are duly executed, and if an accused insists on a Court issuing process for the attendance of his witnesses, he has done all that the law requires of him. It is not his duty to take suitable steps to have his witnesses brought into Court but it is for the Court to do it. Where, therefore, an accused is convicted without hearing his witnesses, as they fail to appear as summonses and warrants are not executed on them, the conviction is illegal and cannot be sustained. *Bissay v. Sessions Judge sitting with Assessors, it is difficult to imagine any circumstances which would justify the High Court in interfering with the order in revision at the instance of the complainant. After a regular trial in the Sessions Court, it would be only in the most exceptional cases that the High Court would be justified in interfering under S. 439 with an order of acquittal, when there is no appeal by the Local Government under S. 417 of the Code. *Joita Bechar v. C. and not after a hearing on the merits under S. 424 of the said Code, while showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, show cause against his conviction as well, except in the same manner as in any other revision application, that is to say, that the conviction was based on no legal evidence or was manifestly erroneous. *Emperor v. far to say that the High Court must accept loyally the findings of facts of the trial Court or the lower Appellate Court, as the case may be, but at the same time it is obvious that the power to interfere is one to be exercised most sparingly and only when there appears to have been a miscarriage of justice or a perverse and unreasonable decision. The High Court cannot be asked to set aside the order of acquittal and direct a re-trial merely on the ground that it would take a different view of the evidence from that which has been taken by the Magistrate who tried the case and had the witnesses before him. *Chandrika Prasad v. An accused when appearing in answer to a Rule to show cause why the sentence passed on him should not be enhanced, is in the same position as if he were appealing from an order of conviction. When the trial has been by Jury and when the sentence is not one of death, the accused cannot ask the Court to enter into questions of fact. If the accused have been sentenced to death, the High Court can consider whether or not the Jury were right in their conclusions on the facts, but where the accused have not been condemned to death, they cannot appeal on facts and the High Court is therefore debarred from considering whether or not the facts are true. In these circumstances, it would be unjustifi-

Where a case comes to the knowledge of the High Court by an appeal being filed against a conviction, it is not desirable, if the appeal is admitted, to issue a notice at the same time for enhancement of the sentence under S. 439 of the Cr. P. C. It is incongruous that the Court in the same breath should admit the appeal of the accused, and should issue notice calling upon him to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, especially where the sentence proposed to be inflicted in the notice to enhance is the sentence of death. The proper procedure is to deal first with the appeal and then to consider whether a notice to enhance should be issued. If after an appeal has been heard on its merits and dismissed, a notice to enhance the sentence is issued, the accused has still the right under Sub-s. (6) of S. 439 of the Cr. P. C. to show cause against his conviction, but any attempt to set aside the conviction would not have much chance of success. Mangal Narain v. Emperor.

Under S. 253 (2) a Magistrate has a discretion to discharge the accused without taking all the evidence that the complainant may wish to produce if he thinks that the charge is groundless. But this does not mean that he can cut short the proceedings by refusing to summon any of the witnesses whom the complainant wants to examine. The mere fact that the matter is one of rendition of accounts and must be referred to the Civil Court, is obviously insufficient to justify an order of discharge under S. 253 (2) in a case of alleged breach of trust. To say that no case has been made out is not tantamount to saying the charge is groundless. Where a complaint prima facie discloses an offence, the Magistrate cannot hold the charge to be groundless unless he knows what is the sort of evidence that is going to be adduced to prove it; and he can only judicially come to such a conclusion when he has at least ascertained from the complainant what is the nature of the evidence his witnesses are going to give. *Mehtab v. A District Magistrate or a Sessions Judge or a Government Pleader may draw the attention of the High Court to a sentence with a view to its being enhanced. The High Court may also, of its own motion, send for the record and take action with a like object. But a private person is not entitled to come to the High Court, and to ask it to enhance a sentence passed by a Subordinate Court. If he considers a sentence unduly lenient, he should draw

———S. 439—Enhancement of sentence—Revision—Sentence passed by Sessions Judge—Revision application by District Magistrate—Practice—Plea of guilty—Evidence.

A High Court will not enhance a sentence passed by a Sessions Court except on very serious grounds. A Court should not record a plea of guilty in the case of a person who is accused of murder or serious culpable homicide, without examining the accused person in order to find out whether he knows what exactly he is pleading to. In cases where death has been caused, it is, even if the accused pleads guilty, extremely desirable that at any rate sufficient evidence should be recorded by the Judge so that he may have something before him from which he can ascertain whether the plea is a genuine and bona fide plea and whether any extenuating circumstances exist. A High Court is not entirely precluded from exercising its right of revision merely because the original promotor of the petition is the District Magistrate, nor is a District Magistrate, as head of the Police, precluded from applying for revision of an inadequate sentence of a Sessions Judge, provided that : (i) he moves the Public Prosecutor to apply for revision and the sanction of Government is obtained before proceeding with, if not before filing, the application for revision : (ii) the application is not one to set aside an order of the Sessions Judge modifying in revision an order of the District Magistrate. *Emperor v. In showing cause against their conviction, the accused must proceed according to the provisions of S. 423 (2) which provides that the Court shall have no authority to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury unless the Court is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge to the jury or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him. Since in an appeal the accused person cannot go behind the verdict of the jury, but can only show that there was misdirection by the Judge or a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge, it cannot be said that an accused in showing cause against enhancement of sentence in a conviction in a jury trial, can go behind the same. *Alef Sheikh v. In revision the High Court can enhance a sentence and inflict any punishment for the offence which in the opinion of the Court has been committed which might have been inflicted for such offence by a Magistrate of the First Class, even although the trial Magistrate was invested only with Second or Third class powers. The accused were convicted by a Magistrate of the Second Class of an offence under S. 325, Penal Code, and sentenced to 3 months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 25 each. Their appeal was rejected by Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who sent the record to the District Magistrate, with a recommendation that the High Court should be moved to enhance the sentences which, in his opinion, were inadequate. The District Magistrate reported the case to the High Court: Held, that the Court had power to enhance the sentence to the limit of the sentence which could have been passed by a Magistrate of the First Class in spite of the fact that the trying Magistrate could only have awarded six months. *Emperor v. A. I. R. 1920 Lah. 213.

—S. 439 (3) —Enhancement of sentence—Practice.

In cases of convictions by Second or Third Class Magistrate, the High Court has power to enhance the sentence beyond the power of the trying Magistrate. The power of enhancement of sentence conferred upon the High Court by S. 439, Cr. P. C., is limited only by clause (3) of that section, which clause does not regard the difference in the powers of the trying Magistrate under S. 32 of the same Code but lays down the general rule that in cases of sentences passed by Magistrates not empowered under S. 34, the limit of enhancement shall be the sentence that may be inflicted by a Presidency or a First Class Magistrate. The practice of the Court to accept the conviction as conclusive and to consider the question of enhancement of sentence on the basis of the facts found by the lower Court would not be followed when it is proposed to enhance a sentence beyond the powers of the trying Magistrate. In such cases invested in the Magistrates referred to in the section a very wide discretion. Therefore, although the High Court should not, as a rule, interfere with powers and discretion of the Magistrate, it may, in certain cases, send for a record to satisfy itself that the order of the Magistrate was legal and that the Magistrate had not acted in an arbitrary manner. The order calls for no interference if it is legal and made after due and careful consideration. Gul Hasan Sahib v. Emperor. 40 Cr. L. J. 823 : 183 I. C. 641 : 12 R. S. 67 :

—S. 439—Exercise of discretion.

A High Court is not bound to go into evidence if it does not think fit. It is for it to decide where it should exercise its discretionary power and where not. The mere application of a party to examine the evidence in any case is not sufficient ground for doing so. There must appear, on the face of the judgment or order complained of or of the record, grave ground to induce the Court to think that the evidence ought to be examined in order to see that there has been no failure of justice. Where there is no such ground, the practice is to limit the interference in revision to matters of law. In this case the evidence ought not to be gone into in revision. The controlling power of the High Court in revision of criminal cases is a discretionary power, and it must be exercised with regard to all the circumstances of each particular case, anxious attention being given to the said circumstances, which vary greatly. This discretion ought not to be crystalized as it would become in course of time by one Judge attempting to prescribe definite rules with a view to bind other Judges in the exercise of the discretion, which the Legislature has committed to them. This discretion, like all other judicial discretion, ought, as far as practicable, to be left untrammelled and free so as to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case. *Emperor v. Where a son and his servants removed after 18 months from the possession of his deceased father's mistress, certain buffaloes which were once the real or supposed property of his father (the father having maintained them formerly and perhaps presented them to the mistress) and where, though the buffaloes were not removed peacefully, nor after notice, given, nor in her presence, the Magistrate discharged them: Held, (in revision) that a removal of this sort was not consistent with a bona fide assertion of an owner's lawful claim; that, if there was such a belief of the son, as was claimed, he should not have slept over his rights for so many months and then asserted them in such an uncompromising and high-handed manner; that it was not a behaviour, from which bona fides might be inferred: and that, therefore, the accused should be re-arrested and re-tried and the evidence re-recorded de novo. *Emperor v. —S. 439—Interference—Grounds for—Discharge of accused—Extradition—Prima facie case—Penal Code, S. 500—Defamation.

A Magistrate in a case of defamation discharged the accused. In revision the case was remanded for further enquiry, but the accused refused to appear and went into a foreign jurisdiction. An enquiry was, therefore, ordered before a Magistrate of that jurisdiction, who reported that in his opinion, there was not sufficient ground for extradition. On this the Magistrate trying the case, again discharged the accused: Held, (in revision) that as the case had been sent down for further enquiry, it could not be held that there was no evidence or not sufficient evidence, that the absence of evidence, such as would warrant a conviction, alone justified an order of discharge (S. 253, Cr. P. C.), that extradition was not the same as a conviction, that the other Magistrate was not the officer appointed to try the accused for the alleged offence, that the accused could not obtain a discharge unless he returned and took his trial; that the extra-judicial opinion of any official outside Kathiawar, could not be accepted; and that the Magistrate should place the proceedings on his dormant file. *Mauilal Ajitrai v. —S. 439—Interference by High Court in pending cases—Revision—Partnership—Dispute of civil nature between partners, criminal prosecution, discouragement of.

The High Court is extremely reluctant to interfere in a preliminary stage, with the trial of an offence before a Magistrate. But it will interfere on occasions where the circumstances clearly call for interference. It is proper that the Courts should look with much suspicion on criminal actions which are brought forward by partners of a still subsisting partnership against one another. By means of threats a prosecution may be made an extremely oppressive mechanism for compelling a partner to admit or to pay up a claim or enter into some compromise in a matter which is really one more suitable for settlement in a civil suit than a case for criminal prosecution. It is often the case that a merchant would, rather, instead of being arrested under a criminal warrant and thus receiving a shock to his credit, be willing to pay up or admit a claim which he believes to be unjust. Such proceeding may often be very excessively oppressive, and the test to be applied to such cases is whether on reading the complaint it seems quite clear that the complainant does not aver that anything has happened which can be brought under any provision of the Penal Code. Udharam v. Emperor.

In an appeal in such a case it is not necessary for the lower Appellate Court to set out over again in detail all the points in the evidence and the reasons, provided it is clear, and the Court has shown by its judgment that it has taken the trouble to re-hear the case. *A. The making of an illegal order does not necessarily vitiate the proceedings. There is no universal rule that disobedience even of a mandatory provision has the consequence of nullification, irrespective of any question of prejudice to the accused or other party. Where an accused has not been in any way prejudiced by a certain procedure followed by the Court and unless it were necessary to do so, it would obviously be undesirable to interfere in revision when the effect of the interference would merely be that the evidence which has been recorded will have to be recorded over again, with consequent waste of time and money. A complaint was brought against the petitioner charging him with offences under Ss. 420, 406 and 403, Penal Code. The case was fixed for hearing. The complainant was absent on that day and the Magistrate then made the order presumably under S. 259, Cr. P. C., "complainant absent. Accused discharged." A fresh complaint was filed on the same facts. This complaint was proceeded with, evidence was heard and ultimately a charge was framed. All this time the accused was not represented by an Advocate. But after the charge was framed, he engaged an Advocate to defend him and a point was then taken that the order of discharge was not a legal order and that it vitiated all subsequent proceedings: Held, the High Court would not interfere in revision as the accused had not been prejudiced by the procedure followed. *Alimahomed Joosab v. Where a discretion has been exercised by a Court of competent jurisdiction which is not on the face of it arbitrary, the practice of the High Court is that as a Revisional Court it will neither enquire into the reasons for, nor interfere with, the exercise of the discretion. The power of interference in revision with orders of acquittal should be most sparingly exercised and only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice. In cognisable cases, the Crown is the prosecutor and the custodian of the public peace and if it decides to let an offender go, no other aggrieved party can be heard to object on the ground that he has not taken his full toll of private vengeance. *Gulli Bhagat v. —S. 439—Interference with order of acquittal.

The power of interference in revision with orders of acquittal should be most sparingly exercised, and only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interest of public justice, for instance, where an order of acquittal has been made without trial under an error of law. The High Court will not, in any case, interfere in revision with an order of acquittal on the ground that the inferences drawn by the lower Court from evidence are erroneous. The Legislature does not intend that a private party shall secure by an application in revision a right which is reserved for the Crown only. The High Court has the right to interfere in revision with orders of acquittal, but will only do so in very exceptional cases; for instance, where there has been a denial of the right of fair trial. The High Court will, in exercising its power of revision against an order of acquittal under S. 439 of the Cr. P. C., observe the limitations which established practice has imposed upon appeals under S. 417 of the Code. But though in practice the broad rule of guidance that the Court will only interfere in revision with an acquittal, at least in a case where there has been trial, sparingly and only where interference is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice, may be accepted, no general rule can be laid down beyond this that the Court will interfere where the circumstances require it. *Siban Rai v. A sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment on a youthful first offender aged 14½ years for an offence of dishonestly receiving stolen property under S. 411, Penal Code, is improper, and where in lieu of this sentence the offender has been ordered to be detained in a Reformatory School, the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere with the order for detention. *Jagannath Chaubey v. There is no provision in the Cr. P. C., empowering a High Court to direct Subordinate Courts to delete any passage in a judgment which has once been duly signed and delivered. The High Court is reluctant to exercise its revisional powers where question of fact has been answered upon an appreciation of evidence, and very rarely where there are concurrent findings. It would interfere still less at the instance of a complainant whose complaint has been held proved but whose conduct has been animadverted upon by the lower Court. The High Court will not interfere in revision on the ground of preventing irreparable injustice at the instance of one who has not been convicted and sentenced, before being satisfied that the case is exceptionally strong and that no other means can possibly avert a grave miscarriage of justice. *Sidramaya Ghannaya Kudal v. It is the practice of the Patna High Court not to entertain save under the most exceptional circumstances, an application for revision of a criminal case after the expiry of sixty days from the date of the decision or order impugned. The period of sixty days is intended to cover the proceedings of normal length before the Sessions Judge, and ordinarily will not be extended because the petitioner negligently or deliberately delayed to move the Sessions Judge till the period had nearly expired and when an application is made to the Sessions Judge beyond or even within the period of sixty days from the decision impugned, a further period of sixty days does not become available to the applicant from the date when the Sessions Judge refuses to make a reference under S. 438, Cr. An order under S. 476, Cr. P. C. should disclose the materials upon which it is based; such an order is a judicial order and if it does not show the basis upon which it was passed, it is liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court. An order under S. 476 can only be passed if an offence is committed before the Court or is brought to its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding. An order passed months after the termination of proceedings directing the prosecution of a person for having committed an offence in those proceedings, is bad if it appears that the Magistrate did not become cognizant whilst they are still pending before the subordinate Courts, but the exercise of this power is sometimes fraught with considerable danger to the due administration of criminal justice. If parties are to be allowed to come up at every and any stage of a criminal prosecution to challenge the order of the Magistrate, a very powerful weapon is not once placed in the hands of the well-to-do to defeat the ends of justice and to protect indefinitely a criminal trial. It is for the Magistrate before whom the case is pending to determine whether the facts proved or the facts alleged do or do not constitute a criminal offence. The accused party has done his remedy by way of appeal or revision, when the case has been finally decided. Where an accused person is only summoned and nothing further is done by a Subordinate Court, the High Court has power to quash the proceedings at that stage if it is apparent that grave injustice would be done if the proceedings were allowed to continue. Petitioner who was a candidate for the post of lanbardar made a statement concerning respondent, a rival candidate for the post, that he was not the son of the deceased lanbardar but was pichhlag and lawaris. Respondent filed a complaint against petitioner under S. 500, Penal Code, in pursuance of which a bailable warrant was issued against the petitioner to appear and answer the charge. Petitioner applied to the Sessions Judge to quash the proceedings and his application being rejected, he moved the High Court in revision: Held, (1) that the High Court had power to interfere in revision and quash the proceedings: (2) that the words 'pichhlag' and 'lawaris' did not mean illegitimate and were not defamatory; (3) that even if they had amounted to defamation, the case would have been covered by Exception (9) to S. 499, Penal Code, the allegation having been made by the petitioner in an application made by him bona fide. *Thakaria v. There were two questions referred in this case, viz. 1. Can the High Court, under S. 439, Cr. P. C. interfere with the action of a Magistrate under S. 476, Cr. P. C. 2. If so, can such interference operate to stop the proceedings of the Magistrate, who is acting under S. 476 (2), or to render them void, if they are completed : Held, as to the first question, that the Code of 1898 has made no change in the law with respect to the power of High Courts to revise proceedings of inferior Criminal Courts, and, therefore, a High Court can, under S. 439, interfere with the action of a Magistrate, under S. 476, Cr. C. : Held, as to the second question, that it cannot be dealt with by this Bench, as, under S. 11 of the Lower Burma Courts Act, the question referred must arise in the case, and the decision of the case must be dependent on it for the Judge who refers must ultimately dispose of the case in accordance with the decision of the Bench, to which the question has been referred, and the question referred is not one, on the decision of which by this Bench, the disposal of any case depends and is consequently not one on which the Bench is called upon to give a decision. *A. Accused presented a petition before a Magistrate, stating that a certain person was collecting men and that the accused was under the apprehension that the object was to cause him some injury, and asked that an enquiry might be made through the Police. After the enquiry the Magistrate, holding that the petition was false and vexatious, directed the prosecution of the accused for an offence under S. 182 of the Penal Code: Held, that the accused having given information to a Magistrate which had been held to be false and which was intended to cause the Magistrate to use his lawful powers to the injury or annoyance of another within the meaning of S. 182, Penal Code, the order directing the prosecution of the accused could not be said to be illegal. Although, as a general rule, it is inexpedient to interfere in revision at the instance of a private person with an acquittal after trial by a competent tribunal, yet S. 439, Cr. P. C., undoubtedly confers power on the High Court to set aside an order of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor especially in a case of defamation, where the offence is of so essentially personal a character that the Local Government would seldom be willing to appeal from an acquittal. *Sunderabai v. evidence as insufficient and unconvincing, recorded a judgment of acquittal but added that his own impression was that the case was “not false” and that it should be entered as “true” in the Police register. The Police Officer sought in revision that that part of the Magistrate’s judgment which cast a slur upon his character and was inconsistent with the verdict of acquittal may be expunged: Held, (1) that the order of the Magistrate being a judicial one, the High Court had power to deal with it under S. 439, Cr. P. C., and that it had also power to deal with it under its general superintendence under the Government of India Act; (2) that as a judicial order the order objected to was illegal and inconsistent with the judgment of acquittal; that as an executive order it had no business to be in a judgment and that, therefore, whether executive or judicial, it should be expunged from the judgment. No suggestions of any kind can be made against the accused when a verdict of not guilty is recorded except that of establishing his complete innocence. Even a judgment of acquittal, merely upon the benefit of doubt being given to the accused by reason of suspicious circumstances in the case of the prosecution is entitled to be regarded as a complete exoneration of the accused. A Magistrate exercising judicial functions has to divest himself for a moment of his executive powers and has to forget himself that he has to deal with the person before him as an executive authority. *Birnaranjan Singh v. ————S. 439—Power to set aside order of acquittal—Revision by private prosecutor—Interference—Evidence, improper appreciation of, whether ground for interference—Warrant case—Charge framed—Defence not satisfactory—Procedure.

The High Court has jurisdiction under S. 439, Cr. P. C., to set aside the order of acquittal, but it will not ordinarily interfere in revision in such cases as the instance of a private prosecutor unless it considers that interference is urgently demanded in the interests of justice. Where a revision petition is based solely on the ground that the Trying Magistrate has not properly appreciated the evidence, it ought to be thrown out; the mere fact that the High Court sitting as a Court of Appeal may come to a different conclusion on fact is no ground for entertaining such an application. Although in a warrant case a Magistrate has, in the first instance, thought fit to frame a charge against an accused person, it is not incumbent on him to convict the accused merely because the latter has failed to adduce satisfactory rebutting evidence. It is his duty when he proceeds to judgment to carefully consider all the evidence adduced in the case and the probabilities and surrounding circumstances, and, if at the time he comes to the conclusion that the guilt of the accused has not been satisfactorily established, he is bound to acquit him although he may have framed a charge against him in the first instance. *Damodar v. —S. 439 (4) (5)—Power of High Court to revise order of acquittal.

The revisionary power granted by S. 439, Cr. P. C., though extremely wide, constitutes an extraordinary jurisdiction, to be exercised only in exceptional cases and as a last resort, after all other available remedies have been exhausted. It is essentially a discretionary power of control, not to be crystallized by action under hard and fast rules, but to be left free and untrammelled to the exigencies of each case. The High Court has power to revise an order of acquittal, otherwise than at the instance of the Local Government, having a right of appeal against it; but it will ordinarily refuse to exercise that power, because every such order is appealable. Upon a proper interpretation of S. 439 (4), Cr. P. C., a High Court, acting as a Court of Revision, is not competent to question an order of acquittal upon the merits thereof, or on the ground that it takes a different view of the fact or of the law applicable thereto. *Binda Prasad v. —Ss. 439, 423—Power of High Court to revise order of discharge by Presidency Magistrate.

The High Court has power, under S. 439 read with S. 423, Cr. P. C., to revise an order of discharge passed by a Presidency Magistrate and to direct a further inquiry, if there are good reasons for doing so, although no question of jurisdiction arises in the case. When one of four accused persons jointly charged with an offence was discharged by a Presidency Magistrate, and on appeal by the others who were convicted, the High Court directed his evidence to be taken, and on such evidence being taken and considered, the appeal was dismissed and a Rule was issued upon that person to show cause why the order of discharge should not be set aside and the case against him inquired into again: Held, that although the High Court was not deprived of its jurisdiction to revise the order of discharge by the mere fact of calling upon the accused to give his evidence in the case, yet under the circumstances of the case the order of discharge should not be set aside and the case against him should not again be inquired into. *Emperor v. A High Court has jurisdiction to set aside on revision an order of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor but it should ordinarily exercise this jurisdiction sparingly and only where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice. A High Court has ample jurisdiction, under S. 439, Cr. P. C., to interfere with an acquittal and remedy the wrong, if wrong has been done. During the pendency of appeal, it was discovered that the statement of one of the witnesses furnished to accused was not complete. He thereupon applied recalling that witness for re-cross examination to impeach his credit. The Judge rejected the application, assuming that the statement made by the witness to the Police was untrue: Held, the accused was entitled to have the witness re-called for the re-cross-examination, and the Judge committed a grave error of law in refusing the application, justifying interference by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. *Sadanand Misra v. When an appeal is preferred and it appears to the Judge that there is reason to believe that an enhancement of the sentence should be considered, it is the practice of the Rangoon High Court to issue notice in revision to the accused to show cause against enhancement, and the appeal and the revision are heard at one and the same time. Where a recommendation for enhancement of sentence has been made to the High Court after the decision of the appeal, the accused when called upon to show cause against the enhancement of the sentence cannot be allowed to show cause against his conviction, but may only show cause against enhancement of the sentence. The order of the High Court in appeal must be regarded as final, and the accused person cannot be heard to show cause against his conviction. It does not make any difference that the accused's appeal from jail was dismissed summarily. Such appeals are dismissed summarily after consideration of the grounds of appeal, in addition to the judgement and, if necessary, the evidence. The King v. Nga Ba Saing. 41 Cr. L. J. 108 :

Ordinarily a Judge disposing of a revision petition filed by a convicted person or his pleader against the propriety of his conviction cannot be said to be adjudicating on the question of enhancing the sentence. A Court exercising its revisional powers upon a revision petition ordinarily deals with the points, raised in the petition and has no occasion to travel outside them and consider the whole case upon its merits as the Court that tries the accused and the Court that hears the appeal, if any, does. —S. 439—Procedure—Revision—District Magistrate, whether can make reference against order of Sessions Judge.

It is not the practice of the High Court in India to take action under S. 439, Cr. P. C., on a report by a District Magistrate which has, for its object, interference with a decision by a Court of Session. The proper procedure for a District Magistrate who considers an order of the Sessions Judge illegal, is to move the Public Prosecutor to bring the matter before the High Court. *Emperor v. Where in proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. C., the only possession claimed by a party is that of his tenant and admits that he is not in actual possession, a refusal by the Magistrate to take further evidence cannot be said to have resulted in failure of justice to the party and the order passed by him will not be open to revision. *Penumatsa Ranga Razu v. An omission to make a joint owner of the property a party to the revision is immaterial where no mention is made of such joint owner in the order of the Magistrate and only one man has been declared to be in possession. *Muhammad Sharif v. A Pleader purporting to act on behalf of a lady filed a compromise. The lady complained to Subordinate Judge that she had not authorised the Pleader to compromise, but the application was "shelved." The lady then complained to the District Judge who directed an enquiry by the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge then held an enquiry and examined certain witnesses on behalf of the lady. He disbelieved the applicant, who was a witness, and on the application of the Pleader sanctioned his prosecution. This order was confirmed by the District Judge: Held, that the High Court could not revise this order under S. 439, Cr. P. C.: Held, further, that no revision lay on the Civil side, as the Courts below had not acted without jurisdiction: Held, further, that the shelving of the first complaint was not a refusal to entertain the charge, and this complaint followed by the communication from the District Judge amounted to a "re-charging of the Pleader in the Court of the Subordinate Judge" within the meaning of S. 14, Legal Practitioners' Act. *Mazhar Hasan v. ————S. 439—Revision against acquittal—Non-compoundable case Compromise—Acquittal order passed without consideration of evidence—Interference in revision on application of private party.

As a rule, an interference is not made in revision with an order of acquittal on the application of a private party except where such interference is imperatively demanded in the interests of public justice or where the procedure adopted is so irregular or illegal as to vitiate the whole trial. Therefore, if in a non-compoundable case, instituted on a private complaint, after completion of the prosecution evidence and the framing of a charge, the parties file a compromise stating that they have settled all their differences and have no further dispute left requiring determination, and upon this the trying Magistrate acquits the accused without an appreciation of the evidence and a consideration of the merits of the case, there is a patent error or irregularity which justifies interference in revision with the order of acquittal. *Zahir-ud-Din v. ————S. 439—Revision against acquittal—Application by private prosecutor—Interference.

Although the High Court has jurisdiction under S. 439, Cr. P. C., to set aside an order of acquittal, it is a settled practice that it will not ordinarily interfere in revision at the instance of a private prosecutor unless there has been a miscarriage of justice or that interference is called for either in the interests of law and order or in the interests of public justice or unless the trial has been illegal or so radically and incurably irregular as in fact to have occasioned a failure of justice. The Court will refuse to interfere if the complainant is not anxious so much to secure due administration of justice as to serve his personal grudge or end by attempting to set aside the acquittal. As a matter of practice, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur will not go into evidence as a rule in revision. It will ordinarily confine its interference to cases of exceptional circumstances or where there is an error of law and where the question is merely as to the application of doubtful evidence. *Sherkhan v. The power of interference in revision with a judgment of acquittal is sparingly exercised and ordinarily only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice. investigating officer, who was not called as a prosecution witness, might be used to suggest means of further elucidating points which needed clearing up but only of elucidating them by legal evidence. The use of such a report as evidence is an error in law but it is not by itself a good ground for setting aside an acquittal. An error of procedure of a grave character would afford ground for interference but not a mere error of improper admission of evidence which was not essential to the result which might have been come to wholly independently of it. *Ganga Singh v. The petitioner lodged a complaint charging two persons A and F with offences under Ss. 467 and 468 of the Penal Code. An enquiry was held in the matter by a Deputy Magistrate, who discharged the two accused and by an order under S. 476, Cr. P. C., directed the prosecution of the petitioner for offences under Ss. 193, 465 or 467, Penal Code. The order of discharge was not set aside by the Sessions Judge who directed a further inquiry into the case. The case then came before another Deputy Magistrate, who committed A and F to the Sessions Court for trial. Eventually A was acquitted by the Sessions Judge, who did not expressly find that the case was false but contented himself with saying that the case as against A was a doubtful one. After the acquittal of A, the proceedings against the petitioner initiated by the order of the Deputy Magistrate under S. 476, Cr. P. C., which had been in abeyance were resuscitated. Thereupon the petitioner applied to the Sessions Judge to refer the order under S. 476, Cr. P. C., to the High Court for the purpose of having it quashed. The Sessions Judge refused the application and the petitioner moved the High Court: Held, that as the order under S. 476, Cr. P. C., was more than a year old and as it was made at a time when the evidence had not been so fully brought before the Court as it afterwards was, the order should be set aside and that regard being had to what had subsequently happened, if proceedings were to be taken against the petitioner, they should be initiated afresh. *Chouduri Meah v. The accused was committed by a Magistrate of the First Class to stand his trial before the Court of Session on a charge of murder. At the Sessions trial, he was not convicted of murder, but was found guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and was sentenced to a term of imprisonment. The Government Advocate, on behalf of the Local Government, filed a petition for revision in the High Court, with the object of obtaining a conviction of the accused in respect of murder. The learned Judges of the High Court accepted the ap-

P. C., to convict him of the minor offence punishable under S. 304, viz., culpable homicide not amounting to murder; (2) that though the Sessions Judge did not record an express finding of acquittal in respect of the charge of murder, the conclusion at which he arrived at was tantamount to an acquittal of the accused of the charge of murder; (3) that against such acquittal, the Local Government could have applied to the High Court in pursuance of S. 417, Cr. —S. 439—Revision—When competent—Case pending before Sub-Divisional Magistrate—Order of bail by Sessions Judge—High Court, whether can interfere—“Any proceedings” in S. 439, scope of.

A High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an application under S. 497 (5) or S. 498, against an order granting bail, passed by a Sessions Judge in a case pending before a Subordinate Magistrate. The powers of the High Court under S. 497 (5) are restricted to the cases of persons released by the Trial Magistrate; and those under S. 498, enable the High Court to release an accused on bail but not to order the arrest and committal to custody of persons already released on bail by the Sessions Judge. But proceedings in which it is or has been determined whether bail from the accused person should be taken or not fall within the definition of “any proceedings” under S. 439, and the High Court has powers under that section to interfere and thus to control the propriety as well as the regularity of orders in such proceedings. *Local Government v. The High Court will not interfere in revision with an interlocutory order passed in a case pending in a subordinate Court unless it is of an exceptional nature and one test of its being of exceptional nature is that a bare statement of the facts of the case without any elaborate argument should be sufficient to convince the High Court that the case is a fit one for its interference at an intermediate stage. Where a Magistrate in a proceeding under S. 488, Cr. P. Revision can only be granted, if there is some error of law, some irregularity, or some abuse of or failure to exercise jurisdiction. It is inadvisable for the High Court to interfere in revision when two Courts have concurred in holding that a prosecution is in the interests of public policy. In case of a prosecution under S. 193, I. P. Before an accused is committed to the Court of Sessions, there must be some evidence on the record to prove a prima facie case against him. In the absence of such evidence, it is not permissible to a Magistrate to commit the accused to take his trial in the Court of Session. The Second Class Magistrate cannot hold an inquiry, in view of S. 29-A of the Cr. P. In such a case it is incumbent upon him to direct the complainant to make a complaint to a Magistrate who is empowered to hold a preliminary inquiry before committing the accused to the Sessions. Where the offences mentioned in the complaint are all triable by a Second Class Magistrate and the fact that the accused is a European British subject is not admitted by the complainant and is not known to the Magistrate at the time the warrant is issued, it is open to the accused to submit to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. *G. —S. 439—Scope of—Revisional powers under—Interference at interlocutory stage of criminal proceedings.

Under S. 439, Cr. P. C., High Court's revisional powers are only exercisable to rectify any illegality, irregularity, impropriety or mistake appearing on the face of the record of any proceeding in any inferior Court. While it is not desirable to crystalise or restrict the revisional powers of a High Court, these powers are to be exercised with circumspection and care, and are discretionary. The High Court is restricted to what appears on the record of the proceedings in the inferior Court and it would appear improper in considering the question of the propriety or legality of any such proceedings or integral part thereof to take into consideration matter entirely extraneous to the record of such proceedings. The Judicial Commissioner's Court does not interfere at an interlocutory stage of a criminal proceeding save where exceptional circumstances called for the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction; for example, when it was apparent on the face of the record that there was no ground at all for the institution of criminal proceedings or for the continuation of such proceedings already instituted. *Emperor v. -----Ss. 439 (6), 423 (2)—Scope of S. 439 (6) should be read with S. 423 (2)—S. 439 (6), whether gives accused unlimited right to impugn his conviction.

S. 418, Cr. P. C., limits the right of appeal in cases of convictions based on verdicts of jury to matters of law only. S. 439 (6), Cr. P. C., entitled the person who has been called upon to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced to show cause against his conviction only so far as S. 423 (2), Cr. P. C., allows. The combined effect of S. 439 (6) and S. 423 (2), Cr. P. C., is to entitle the accused to question the conviction by showing that the Judge misdirected the jury or that the jury misunderstood the law laid down by the Judge in his charge. To hold that S. 439 (6) confers an unlimited right of impugning the conviction would be to introduce the anomaly that a person convicted on the verdict of a jury can question the conviction only within the narrow limits laid down in S. 423 (2), but if he has to show cause against a motion for enhancement of sentence, his right to question his conviction is very materially enlarged. Emperor v. Bishwanath.

No party has a right to be heard before any Court exercising its powers of revision under the Cr. P. C. although the Court may, if it thinks fit, hear any party either personally or by Pleader. The fact that the Pleader for a party was not heard when a Court was exercising such powers is not, therefore, a ground for a second application for revision or for a review. It is a good practice to hear Counsel in criminal references in matters of importance, but whether a matter is a matter of importance must be left to the discretion of the Judge hearing the reference. An application for review must come before the Judge who passed the decision which is to be reviewed, and the Counsel for review should ask that the application be put before the Judge who decided the matter. It is contrary to all propriety that a Counsel should put in an application for review and attempt to get it heard by another Judge by styling his application as an application in revision. *Sripal Narain Singh v. The first stage in the procedure laid down by S. 465 is that it must appear to the Court that the accused placed on his trial, was of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence. The next stage that is to follow when it appears to the Judge that the accused is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, is that the fact of such unsoundness of mind and incapacity should be enquired into on the materials placed before the Court. *Emperor v. The moment a question arises as to insanity of an accused person in a Sessions trial, the Judge ought to put to the Jury as a preliminary issue to be tried by them as to whether or not the Jury are satisfied that the accused is a person of unsound mind and can stand his trial and is in a position to understand the proceedings which are going on in Court. Evidence must be led on this point and the Jury must arrive at their conclusion upon the basis of such evidence. Radhanath Mandal v. Emperor.

A false information was given at the Thana regarding the death of a girl. The informant, the chowkidar, was directed to be prosecuted under Ss. 182 and 211, Penal Code. On an application by the opposite party, the Sessions Judge sanctioned the prosecution of two other persons by the following order :—“There can be no doubt that D. and A. instigated the chowkidar to lodge this information. I direct that they be prosecuted under S. 211 with the chowkidar.” Held, the sanction was without jurisdiction and bad. Dharamadas Kaur v. Emperor. 7 Cr. L. J. 340 : 7 C. L. J. 373 : 12 C. W. -----S. 476—Additional evidence—Appellate Court, power of, to take additional evidence, limits of—Evidence improperly admitted.

The legitimate occasion for the use of the power conferred by Order XLI, rule 27, C. P. C., on an Appellate Court is when, on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, not where a discovery is made outside the Court, of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it. Where additional evidence is improperly admitted in appeal, the Court has no jurisdiction to direct the prosecution of a witness on the basis of such evidence and an order made under S. 476, Cr. P. C., in such a case cannot be sustained. Jagdeo Lal v. Ram Lagan Singh. 20 Cr. L. J. 826 : 53 I. C. 826 : A. I. R. 1919 Pat. 341.

It is a fundamental principle that a person once acquitted of an offence cannot again be tried for that offence. But dismissal of a complaint or discharge of an accused in a warrant case is no bar to his being there-after tried on the same facts. Where, therefore, the District Judge on appeal sets aside the order of the lower Court rejecting an application under S. 476 asking the Court to file a complaint against a person, and directs the lower Court to hold an inquiry and file complaint, if necessary, the lower Court is not debarred from filing complaint after inquiry, by its previous refusal to do so. *Kunjo Choudhry v. The language of S. 476-B, Cr. P. C., indicates that the Court to which an appeal lies under that section is one to which the Court making or filing the complaint is subordinate. In other words, if it is a Civil Court which has made an order under S. 476, the appeal against such an order must lie to and be heard by the authority or Tribunal to which such Civil Court is subordinate and the procedure governing an appeal of this description is that prescribed by the Cr. P. C. for the hearing of an appeal. Where such an appeal is argued in part by the Counsel for the appellant and is then adjourned but at the adjourned hearing the Counsel for the appellant does not turn up, the Court is entitled to assume that the appeal has been abandoned and to dismiss it. ———S. 476—Complaint under—Complaint for fabricating false evidence, order for, requirements of—Language not clear and precise, effect of.

An order of a Judge that a complaint should be made under S. 476, Cr. P. C. which contains no finding as required by the section that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made into the alleged offences nor any suggestion of reasons for such a finding is irregular and cannot be sustained. In a complaint under S. 476, Cr. P. C., by a Judge for the offence of giving and fabricating false evidence, it is incumbent on the Judge to make clear and precise allegations in the complaint, inasmuch as in such a case the allegations, if vague, cannot be reduced to precision by oral examination as in an ordinary complaint by a private party, and also because a Magistrate trying the case cannot travel outside the limits of the complaint. Where a Court has properly complained under S. 476 of the offence of fabricating false evidence, there is nothing to prevent the trying Magistrate from framing if the evidence supports it, a charge of forgery in respect of which no sanction or complaint of particular authority or officer is required. In re : Yerneni Satyanaryana.

It is not necessary that a Court making a complaint under S. 476, Cr. P. C., should state under what particular section the offence complained of falls and a failure to mention the section does not render the complaint or the proceedings taken on it irregular. Where a complaint made under S. 476, Cr. P. C., after narrating the facts mentions Ss. 463 and 471, Penal Code, the complaint must be deemed to cover all forms of forgery which the evidence may show to have been committed. The words "any offence described in S. 463" in or in relation to a proceeding in any Court. Before exercising its discretion to lay a complaint, the Court should find, that there is a reasonable probability of a conviction resulting from the complaint. If the application is delayed, and the delay is not satisfactorily explained, evidence called in support thereof naturally comes under suspicion, and the inference arises that the interests of public justice are less likely to be served than the interests of the applicant by the laying of a complaint. Moreover, a party who has been unsuccessful in a case should not remain indefinitely under the threat that an application for his prosecution may be filed, such a weapon is likely to be used for improper purposes. These considerations apply with force when the application is not founded on materials to be found on the record of the trial, but on evidence of additional facts which the applicant alleges to be available. In such cases, strict explanation of the reasons for the delay in making the application is necessary; otherwise, it cannot be held that it is in the interests of justice to make a complaint. *Mohammad Kaka v. secution.

It is essential that the Court which passes order under S. 476, Cr. P. C., should apply its mind to the matter upon its merits. When, therefore, a Judge of the High Court in disposing of an appeal considered the defence evidence to be deliberately false and directed the Sessions Judge "to take action under S. 476 and to send the witnesses to the nearest Magistrate to be charged with perjury," and the Sessions Judge ordered their prosecution without applying his mind to the merits of the case: Held, that Sessions Judge should himself have taken the initiation of ordering the prosecution and that as he had not done so, the order of prosecution could not stand. Ghanram Rai v. Emperor.

Where perjury is alleged to have been committed in the course of a judicial proceeding and is duly brought to the notice of the Court, the Court is justified in taking action under S. 476, Cr. P. C., and order prosecution of the offender. It is not necessary that the Court should form its opinion as to the desirability of prosecuting the offender during the progress of the actual case. It is not fair to allow proceedings for perjury to take their course where the evidence is evenly balanced and there is no reasonable probability of securing a conviction. *Valab Das v. A Civil Court making an enquiry under S. 478, Cr. P. -----S. 476—Duty of Court.

A Court should ordinarily wait till the whole evidence has been let in before taking proceedings under S. 476, Cr. P. C., though it cannot be laid down as an invariable rule that proceedings should be deferred till the conclusion of the case. A departure from the rule will not sustain an objection of 'illegality' or 'want of jurisdiction' under S. 115, C. P. C. The sending by a Court of a witness to the Magistrate before the judicial proceedings are over, would be acting with impropriety, which means 'irregularity' in all but exceptional cases. There is no objection to Judicial Officers suggesting compromises in suitable cases, though it is possible that a few lazy Judicial Officers might suggest them, not in order to do good to the litigants, but in order to save themselves the trouble of deciding suits in the regular course. If a Court is informed of the possibility of an adjustment of the disputes between the parties, it is its duty to ask the parties and their Pleaders to retire for consultation and then take up other work. *Emperor v. The Court to which the application for stay of proceedings is presented, should not prejudice the appeal by making any declaration as to the correctness or otherwise of the order appealed against to determine whether the prosecution should be postponed or not, but should leave it to the Court which has cognizance of the appeal, staying proceedings meantime. *Debi Mahto v. Proceedings under S. 476, Cr. P. As a rule, the Magistrate should not make up his mind to start proceedings under S. 476 against a witness before he has heard all the evidence in the case. The holding of a preliminary enquiry under S. 476 is discretionary, but it should be held, wherever it appears to be necessary to hold it in the interests of justice, and wherever it is held, it must be a real enquiry and not merely a formal one, ample opportunity being given to the accused to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. *Ramoo Singh v. —S. 476—Duty of Court—Prosecution under S. 211, Penal Code.

Prosecutions under S. 211, Penal Code, are not to be undertaken lightly and although the absence of a finding that the prosecution is necessary in the interest of justice, is not necessarily fatal, it is certainly desirable that Courts dealing with these matters should consider whether an attempt to use the law in aid of a private grudge is being made and whether the Courts should allow themselves to become the instrument of a private grudge and also what facts can be proved and whether these facts are likely to be sufficient to support the conviction. As regards the facts that can be proved, it is obvious that a conviction cannot be based merely on improbability or on what a particular officer suspects. Bachu Singh v. Tribeni Sah. 40 Cr. L. A Patwari appeared as a witness in a civil case in the Court of a District Judge. After the decision of the case, the District Magistrate had a Departmental inquiry made which went to show that the Patwari had fabricated false evidence and had also forged a signature in his diary in the Tahsil records. Upon this, the District Magistrate applied to the District Judge for sanction to prosecute the Patwari for the offence of perjury and forgery, and along with his application for sanction, forwarded the record of the Departmental inquiry. The District Judge on appeal of this record issued notice to the Patwari, and after hearing him, directed his prosecution on the basis of the Departmental inquiry: Held, (1) that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to order prosecution in respect of matters which had occurred in the Tahsil and not in his Court; (2) that, assuming the matters to have been brought to the notice of the District Judge in the course of a judicial inquiry, as the record of the Departmental inquiry was not evidence in the matter of the sanction applied for by the District Magistrate, the District Judge acted with material irregularity in ordering prosecution without having himself made an enquiry. *Ganesh Pershad v. On the 4th of February following, the Magistrate, on the application of a Police Officer, ordered the prosecution of the accused under S. 211, Penal Code: Held, (1) that the delay which occurred in making an order under S. 476 did not deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction to proceed under the section; (2) that if the procedure adopted by the Magistrate in sending the case to another Magistrate for enquiry and report was irregular, the irregularity was cured under S. 537, Cr. The only way in which the validity of an order under S. 476 can be challenged is by invoking the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, but inasmuch as the exercise of that jurisdiction is purely discretionary, such order cannot be challenged as a matter of right. Therefore, a person against whom an order under S. 476 is made is not precluded from challenging the validity of the order in the subsequent trial or in an appeal from the conviction obtained in the subsequent trial. *Ramoo Singh v. Whenever the conduct of the Jury is taken exception to during the progress of the trial in the Sessions Court, the Presiding Judge has undoubted jurisdiction to enquire into the same. Such an enquiry is, a judicial enquiry, and the Judge is entitled to call upon persons to appear before him to administer oath to such persons and to require them to give evidence, and proceedings under S. 476, Cr. P. C., can be drawn up in respect of false statements made in the course of such enquiry. Where an order made by a Judge by itself and in view of proceedings started under S. 476, Cr. P. C., carries the implication that the Judge must have felt that the ends of justice required that an enquiry before a Magistrate should take place, the fact that the Judge has not expressly recorded that it is expedient in the ends of justice that a complaint should be made, is quite immaterial. *Bhuban Chandra Prodhan v. The Deputy Magistrate examined R. and G. and having satisfied himself that the marriage had actually taken place, submitted the case for orders before the District Magistrate, who dismissed the application. The District Magistrate upon a subsequent application in which the story of the marriage was challenged as false, held a local enquiry and came to the conclusion that G. and R. had given false evidence before the Deputy Magistrate and ordered their prosecution for perjury : Held, that offence of perjury had not been brought to the notice of District Magistrate in a "judicial proceeding" within the meaning of S. 476, Cr. Petitioner instituted a suit at Bilaspur against a resident of Arrah and obtaining a decree, sought to execute it at Arrah by means of a transfer. The judgment-debtor then instituted a suit at Arrah to have the decree of the Bilaspur Court set aside, on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud. The suit was decreed, and petitioner's appeal to the District Judge, Arrah, was dismissed. The District Judge, finding that the petitioner had brought a false suit and had obtained a decree by fraud and by tampering with the service of summonses, etc., directed his prosecution under Ss. 209, 210, Penal Code: Held, that the District Judge had jurisdiction to take action against petitioner under S. 476, as the offences alleged to have been committed by him were brought to the notice of the District Judge in the course of a judicial proceedings. *Rajkumar Singh v. A Deputy Magistrate dismissed a complaint under S. 203, Cr. P. C., on the ground that it was false but made no order against the complainant. On the case being brought to the notice of the District Magistrate, the latter sent instructions to the Deputy Magistrate that a prosecution under S. 211, Penal Code, should be instituted against the complainant. The Deputy Magistrate thereupon passed an order under S. 476, Cr. P. C., directing the prosecution of the complainant under S. 211, Penal Code. On an appeal to the Sessions Judge, the latter held that the order for prosecution was really passed by the District Magistrate, who had no jurisdiction to pass it, but being of opinion that the complainant ought to be prosecuted, the Sessions Judge himself made a complaint under the powers conferred on him by S. 476-A, C. P. C. : Held, (1) that if the complaint made by the Deputy Magistrate was valid, it should have been and would have been upheld by the learned Sessions Judge and the order of the learned Sessions Judge was, therefore, substantially correct; (2) that if the complaint made by the Deputy Magistrate was invalid and ultra vires as the Sessions Judge found, then there was no complaint recognizable by law, and that as the matter had come before the Sessions Judge in appeal, it was within his jurisdiction to make a complaint himself under S. 476-A, Cr. Before an application to make a complaint under S. 476, Cr. P. C., could be disposed of, the Munsif to whom the application was made was transferred, and the case was transferred by the District Judge to another Munsif. The latter rejected the application holding that he had no jurisdiction to make a complaint under S. 476. The applicant appealed to the District Judge who, without deciding whether the Munsif to whom the case was transferred had jurisdiction directed that a complaint should be made. On second appeal : Held, (1) that no second appeal lay as the order made by the District Judge was an appellate order under S. 476-B ; (2) that the District Judge acted with material irregularity in making a complaint in the exercise of his appellate powers without deciding whether the Court whose decision was appealed from had jurisdiction to make a complaint, and that the order could, therefore, be set aside under S. 115, C. Under the present law, a Court must make a complaint and cannot directly order prosecution. That complaint must set forth the offence, the precise facts on which it is based and the evidence available for proving it. It is not desirable that a Court should review its order refusing to make a complaint under S. 476 inasmuch as an appeal is allowed under S. 476-B and the Code generally has made no provision for review. *Ram Prasad v. Every case of perjury need not necessarily result in the prosecution of the person who is guilty of the offence. It is the policy of the law, as appears from the amendment of the relevant sections of Cr. P. C., whereby such prosecutions have not now been left to private prosecutors but their conduct has been entrusted to the Courts, that in dealing with such matters the Court should see that the prosecution is undertaken in the interests of justice. Ordinarily the High Court is reluctant to interfere with orders in perjury cases where the Courts below, after a consideration of the entire material on the record, have come to the conclusion that an offence has been committed, which, it is desirable, in the interest of justice, to send for enquiry to a Magistrate; Held, that under the circumstances of the case, it was necessary for the Court to find that the conviction of the witnesses for perjury was paretically certain before directing his prosecution. *Nand Lal v. When any order depends upon matters already on record, no preliminary inquiry is necessary; but when it depends upon evidence of other facts which are not to be found on the record, in fairness to the person accused, a preliminary inquiry must be held, and in that preliminary inquiry, he must be made aware of the allegations which are made against him and of the materials upon which those allegations are based. If the order is to depend upon additional evidence, then he must be made aware of what that additional evidence is. When the additional evidence is procured as a result of an application by a private party, it is essential that, if justice is to be done, the evidence should be recorded in his presence and he should be given an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses: otherwise he cannot be in a position to rebut the allegations which are made against him in the application. *Mohammad Kaka v. An application to a Court to make a complaint under S. 476, Cr. P. C. was dismissed for default. Instead of doing anything he put in an application before the District Judge. This application was not within limitation for an appeal. Notwithstanding the fact that the lower Court's order of dismissal was still in force, the District Judge accepted the application and made a complaint : Held, that the order of the District Judge was without jurisdiction. Under the provisions of S. 476-A, he could take action only if the lower Court had neither made a complaint itself, nor rejected an application for the making of one. The District Judge entertained this application on the ground that the dismissal in default was not a rejection of the application. He was not concerned with the reasons for which the application was dismissed (so long as the procedure was regular) and had it been the intention of the legislation that 'rejection' in S. 476-A should not include rejection on the ground that the complainant did not appear to prosecute the application as he ought to have done, it would presumably have made this clear. *Jahan Khan v. That in the matter of recording further evidence, it was not competent to the Deputy Magistrate to compel the attendance of B. R. either before the Sub-Magistrate, or before himself. -----S. 476—Power of High Court to interfere.

When a criminal offence is alleged to have been committed in the course of a revenue or civil proceeding, the rule is that the facts upon which the criminal offence is founded should be finally determined in the Civil or Revenue Court before a prosecution in respect of the criminal offence is commenced. The refusal of the Revenue or Civil Court to try out the proceedings in which the criminal offence is alleged to have been committed, materially affects the criminal proceedings and amounts to a denial of the right of fair trial. In such a case the High Court is competent to interfere with the order directing the institution of criminal proceeding under S. 107, Government of India Act. Faujdar Rai v. Emperor, 26 Cr. L. The complainant must have falsely charged such person with having committed an offence, that is to say, the person must be innocent. The complainant must have known that there is no just or lawful ground for the proceeding or charge. Thirdly, there must have been an intention to cause injury to the person. *Bachu Singh v. The phraseology of S. 476, Cr. P. C., shows that a preliminary inquiry is not obligatory. An order under that section may be made by a Judge who had not heard the evidence at the original trial, and without an independent investigation, as the power to direct prosecution is conferred on the Court and not on the individual officer who fills the judicial office at a particular time. Whether the person against whom an order under S. 476 has been made without a preliminary investigation, has been prejudiced by reason of the omission to make such investigation, is a matter which may be considered by the High Court when

The grant of sanction to prosecute, the revocation of sanction already granted, and the refusal of an application to grant sanction, are all judicial acts. A District Judge in an appeal under S. 195 (6), Cr. P. C., affirmed the order of a Munsif and refused to grant sanction to a stranger to a suit, and at the same time made an order under S. 476 : Held, that it was perfectly open to the Judge to take proceedings under S. 476, as the fact of the commission of an offence had been brought to his notice in the course of a judicial proceeding under S. 195 (6) : Held, also, that the Judge acted properly in refusing to grant sanction to a stranger to the suit. *Bala Pasban Kuldip Lal v. In an application made under S. 476 read with S. 195, Cr. P. If a Judge desires to take action against alleged accomplices in an offence committed by a party to the proceeding, he should make a proper enquiry himself or through Police or some subordinate Court and after considering the report of such enquiry, he should record a finding separately in the case of every person that it is necessary in the interest of justice that enquiry should be made into a particular offence with respect to that person by a Magistrate. *Shabbir Hasan v. -----S. 476—Procedure—Complaint before Magistrate—Inquiry—Offence disclosed not triable by Magistrate—Order directing prosecution.

A complaint was filed in the Court of a Magistrate of the Second Class stating that the accused was attempting to cheat the complainant and requesting that he should be punished. The Magistrate held a judicial inquiry and discovering prima facie grounds, he made an order under S. 476, Cr. P. C. directing the prosecution of the accused under Ss. 467 and 473, Penal Code. The accused was, therefore, tried and Under S. 476 of the Cr. P. C., the preliminary inquiry has to be made by the Civil Court itself. If it so desires, an enquiry may be ordered by the Police, but in such a case, the Civil Court has to determine whether it is necessary to take action against particular persons under S. 476 and should record a finding to that effect against each individual complained against. *Shabir Hasan v. -----S. 476—Procedure.

During the pendency of a complaint implicating certain person on charges of rioting, house-tresspass and hurt, a complaint was filed by a relation of the accused in the Court of another Magistrate, against the complainants in the first case, of offences punishable under Ss. 161 and 193 read with S. 116, I. P. C., alleging that on a day previous to filing of the first complaint they offered bribe to the Medical Officer in order to obtain a false certificate about their injuries: Held, the complaint of the Magistrate trying the first case was necessary in respect of the offence alleged under S. 193, I. P. C., and as the two offences were part and parcel of the same transaction, the other Magistrate had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint. The proper procedure was to apply to the first Magistrate under S. 476. Dharumal Teumal v. Teumal Lekhranj. 41 Cr. L. J. 821 :

In a Criminal Proceeding an accused person ought to be distinctly made to understand from the beginning what the Court is about, and no laxity ought to be allowed in the procedure prescribed by the Legislature. this. Proceedings under S. 476 are not invalidated by the mere fact that the accused was neither a party nor a witness in the original suit. If an offence is brought to the notice of a Court in the course of a judicial proceeding, it has jurisdiction to proceed under S. 476, it being immaterial whether the persons concerned appeared before the Court or not. Where a Judge entertains a suspicion that an attempt is being made to use as genuine a forged document, there is nothing to preclude him from proceeding against the persons concerned with regard to the forgery itself. *Narayan Shaligram v. S. 476, Cr. P. C., has to be read with S. 195, and the restrictions mentioned in the latter section are to be treated as incorporated in the former. Therefore, no order for prosecution can be made under S. 476 when the alleged offence under S. 211, I. P. C., has been committed in the course of a police investigation and not in relation to proceeding in a Court. But when the police reported the complaint to be false and the petitioner insisted upon a judicial investigation, the position is entirely different, and he must be taken to have preferred a complaint to the Magistrate; and if that complaint is found false, he may be proceeded against under S. 476. *Jadunandan Singh v. It is not desirable or reasonable to prosecute a witness either for perjury or for an attempt to commit the offence, if he corrects in his cross-examination a statement made by him in his examination-in-chief, on his being confronted with an earlier statement made by him some time previously, as the very gist of an offence of perjury is the fact that it amounts to an attempt to mislead and deceive the Court and the offence cannot be said to be complete if the deponent corrects himself before leaving the Court. It is not advisable to order prosecution for an offence of perjury if it is of a most technical nature and there is no large degree of certitude of conviction. Tarachand Marwadi v. Emperor.

It is open to a Court to make an order under S. 476, Cr. P. C., without taking any evidence at all. If it chooses to take evidence, it is entirely within its discretion to say when and where that evidence should stop. The section gives the widest discretionary power to a Criminal Court and deliberately refrains from imposing any special formalities to hamper the discretion of the Court. *Bokir Saheb Amir Saheb v. All that S. 476, Cr. P. C., requires is that an offence mentioned or referred to in S. 195 should have been brought to the notice of the Court in the course of a judicial proceeding. S. 476 vests jurisdiction in a Magistrate to try a case if one is sent to him for trial by a Court mentioned in that section. All that is required to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate to try the case is that he should have been the nearest Magistrate. The section has nothing to do with local or territorial jurisdiction at all. Rup Narain Singh v. Emperor. 20 Cr. L. J. 202 : 49 I. C. 650 : A. I. R. 1919 Pat. 189.

A complaint of abetment of forgery is a complaint of an offence punishable under one of the sections of the Code named in S. 195 (1) (b), namely S. 205, I. P. C. Moreover, the phrase in S. 476, Cr. P. C., "any offence referred to in S. 195, Sub-s. (1), cl. (b)" must mean any offence to which S. 195, Sub-s. (1), cl. (b), has reference. Applications in revision from an order under S. 476-B, Cr. P. C. by a Civil Court to the High Court should be heard and decided in accordance with the provisions of S. 439, Cr. P. C. It is certainly a Court which is exercising jurisdiction in a criminal matter, and orders passed by it can be revised by the High Court under S. 439. Not only does the procedure relating to criminal appeals apply to a proceeding under S. 476-B, but any order made under that section can be revised by the High Court under S. 439, and the provisions of S. 115, C. —S. 476—Scope of.

A document which is not addressed to a person other than the writer is not a complaint either in the ordinary sense or in the sense in which the word is used in S. 476, Cr. P. C. The meaning of S. 476 is that a Judicial Officer minded to initiate proceedings for offences therein described must initiate them before another person who is a Magistrate of the First Class having jurisdiction and must do so by making and forwarding a complaint to him. Colin Mackenzie Mackay v. Emperor.

Obiter.—While, no doubt, a Court may properly hesitate to make a complaint on an application which is presented long after proceedings have ended and which is obviously not prompted by any other motive than personal grudge, there is nothing in the Statute warranting the proposition that action under S. 476 is only to be taken before the close of the proceedings in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed, or in strict continuation of them, or within any particular time after their termination. Nor is there justification for the view that only applications prompted by high motives are to be entertained. Jahan Khan v. Emperor.

———S. 476—Scope of—Magistrate making enquiry requiring help of Police—Reference to District Magistrate, legality of—Delay in instituting proceedings, effect of.

A case came before an Assistant Collector on appeal against the decision of the Revenue Court of a Mamlatdar; the Assistant Collector being suspicious that a forged kabuliyat had been used by the plaintiff, an Inamdar called on him for an explanation, which he received along with a report by the Mamlatdar. The Assistant Collector then applied for the assistance of the Criminal Investigation Department from the District Magistrate, and a full report was submitted to him by the Deputy Superintendent of Police. He then referred the matter for inquiry to the nearest First Class Magistrate, which resulted in both the Inamdar and the Mamlatdar being committed to the Court of Sessions where they were convicted, the former under S. 209, 470, 219 and 109, Penal Code, and the latter under Ss. 466 and 219. On appeal to the High Court, it was objected—(a) that even if the offence was brought under notice in judicial proceedings of the Assistant Collector as regards the Inamdar, it was not so brought to notice as regards the Mamlatdar; (b) that the whole of the preliminary inquiry should have been made by the Assistant Collector, who, after his reference to the District Magistrate, was functus officio and consequently his order under S. 476, Cr. P. C., was without jurisdiction; (c) that there was delay in proceeding under S. 476 and the delay was fatal: Held, (1) that under S. 476 it was the case which was to be sent for inquiry to the nearest Magistrate, and not necessarily all the offenders who might be concerned in the commission of the offence, the subsequent clause of the section referring only to such offender or offenders as might at that time be known and be within the grasp of the inquiring officer; (2) that the reference to the District Magistrate did not deprive the Assistant Collector of jurisdiction, as the reference was made merely to that officer as the executive controller of the Police and not to him in his judicial capacity as the District Magistrate; (3) that there was nothing in the section itself or in the reasons for its enactment to hold that officers acting under it were bound to make their inquiry in the actual course of the judicial proceeding, or so shortly thereafter as to make it a continuation of those proceedings. *Waman Dinkar v. S. 488—Adultery, as ground for refusing maintenance.

A Court may refuse to make an order for maintenance of a wife where she had deserted her husband improperly and had committed adultery, although at the time of making the application, she was not living in adultery, or where she had been expelled from caste on account of adultery and had thereby made it impossible for her husband to keep her with him without himself losing the society of his fellow castemen. *Ram Autar v. In a case of maintenance, the respondent who puts forward a charge of "living in adultery" against the petitioner as his only defence to the claim for maintenance ought to begin his case and the petitioner against whom this charge is made, ought to have an opportunity of adducing rebutting evidence. *Kista Pillai v. S. 488—Adultery—Meaning of.

"Living in adultery" means something quite different from living an unchaste life. The principle is that a husband is absolved from the obligation to maintain his wife when his wife has a de facto protector with whom she lives and by whom she is being maintained as if she were his wife. The obligation of a husband to maintain his wife arises from the anxiety of the Legislature to protect deserted wives from the bitter necessity of earning a living by trading on their sex. It obviously is not the law that a man may desert and neglect his wife and thus tempt her to unchastity and then resist her claim to be maintained by him on the ground that she is unchaste. A. T. Lakshmi Ambalam v. Andiammal.

S. 488—Adultery—Meaning of.

The clear implication from the words "living in adultery" in S. 488, Cr. P. C., is that, unless the wife is actually living in adultery at or about the time of the application, she is not disentitled to obtain maintenance. Continued adulterous conduct is what is meant by "living in adultery". The question, therefore, for the Magistrate to decide in such a case is whether there had been such adulterous conduct on the part of the wife at or about the time of the application, that is to say, shortly before or shortly after the application was made, interpreting the word shortly in a reasonable manner. Kista Pillai v. Amirthammal.

S. 488—Adultery—Meaning of.

The expression "living in adultery" in S. 488 (5) points to a continuous course of conduct and not merely to isolated acts of immorality. Therefore, although a woman has given birth to an illegitimate child, it is open to a Magistrate, to find that apart from that circumstance, she is not "living in adultery". *Jatindra Mohun Banerji v. —S. 476—Stay of proceedings.

Where a document produced is found by the trial Court to be a forged one and a complaint is made under S. 476, the question whether his prosecution should be stayed or not till the disposal of an appeal from the decision of the Court of first instance, depends on the balance of convenience in the circumstances of each particular case. *Sochet Singh v. —Ss. 476, 561-A—Stay of proceedings—Offence committed in course of suit—Complaint by Civil Court—Appeal from decree.

Interests of justice require that a Criminal Court trying a case against a person in respect of an offence committed by him in a civil case, on a complaint made under S. 476, Cr. P. Where a Subordinate Judge, District Judge or Sessions Judge of experience makes an order that a party or witness in a civil case shall stand his trial under S. 476, Cr. P. C., the prosecution should not be stayed because of an appeal pending against the civil case, if the appeal is not likely to be decided soon. At the same time, the decision arrived at by the Magistrate should not have any effect upon the Court which may hear the civil appeal, rather the decision of the Magistrate in that matter is not relevant evidence to produce and bring before the Appellate Court. *Anrudh Kumar v. —S. 476—Successor-in-office—Whether can order.

—S. 476—‘Such Court’, meaning of—Court of Subordinate Judge, whether permanent Court.

The use of the words “such Court” in S. 476, Cr. P. C., makes it clear that the Court empowered to take action under that section is the same Court before which the offence has been committed or under whose notice the offence has been brought in the course of judicial proceedings. Subordinate Judge is competent to continue an enquiry under S. 476 begun by his predecessor. Tara Chand v. Emperor. 23 Cr. L. J. 451 : 67 I. C. 723 : 65 P. L. R. 1922 : A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 479.

—S. 476—‘That Court’, significance of.

Although the words ‘that Court’ in S. 476, Cr. P. C., relate back to the Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court mentioned at the beginning of the section, once proceedings have been called for by a High Court in revision, and it is apparent that an offence referred to in S. 195, Sub-s. (1), Cl. (b) or Cl. (c), Cr. P. C., has been committed in relation to the proceedings then before it, the High Court as a Criminal Court has power to make a complaint though the offence complained of was not committed in the course of proceedings in the High Court. *Emperor v. ———S. 488—Child—Neglects to maintain, what is.

Under S. 488 the neglect or refusal may be by words or by conduct. It may be express or implied, and when the opponent has denied the paternity of a child, that is a fact from which Court may infer neglect to maintain. Where the paternity and the neglect are established a maintenance order should be made. Mst. Hidayat Khatun v. Mahomed Hayat.

———S. 488—Child—Offer to maintain—Maintenance for son—Past neglect, effect of—Magistrate, duty of.

When an application is made under S. 488 by a child, it is the duty of the Magistrate to enquire, first, as to whether the child is unable to maintain itself; secondly, if the father is in a position to support his child, and thirdly, whether the father is neglecting to maintain his child. Past neglect of his duty to support his child may be a cogent factor in coming to a finding that at the time of the application the father is neglecting or refusing to support his offspring. If a father offers to maintain his son on condition that he lives with him, the Magistrate should refrain from passing an order against the father until he has had an opportunity at least of proving that the offer is made in good faith. Sardar Muhammad v. Nur Muhammad.

———S. 488—Child—Offer to maintain.

When a child is in the custody of his mother, and the father has not, before the receipt of the summons, either asked for the custody of the child or offered to provide for him in any way, he must be held to have neglected to maintain the child; and an offer made in Court to maintain the child on condition that it lives with him will not take away the Magistrate's jurisdiction to order the father to pay for the child's maintenance. *Mi Gauk v. Under S. 482 the Court does not dispose of the offence, but it merely makes a complaint. There is no reason why the Legislature should desire to limit the right of a Court to make a complaint by the extraordinary provision that unlike a private complainant a Court should only be allowed to complain on the day on which the offence takes place. means, (2) whether he neglects or refuses to maintain his wife. The language of the section is inconsistent with the capacity of a wife to make a contract absolving her husband from his statutory liability. Where a settlement has been made, whether intended to be final or not, the question for determination is whether that settlement now furnishes sufficient means of support. Mi Le v. Nga Paw Din.

Parties cannot contract themselves out of the Statutory obligation to maintain children under Cr. P. C. The mere fact that S. 488, Sub-s. Subsequent to an order of maintenance of a child against its father, the latter made a gift of his half share in a house to the child, the other half share of which was held by the mother. The mother was living in the house up to the time of the execution of the deed of gift. The order of maintenance was sought to be cancelled: Held, that the child's income from its half share was not an income which was sure by any means and hence the order could not be cancelled completely, but in view of the fact that the house had now become the sole property of mother and child and thus caused a change in the child's circumstances, the effect of which it was difficult to assess, the amount might be reduced. *Maung Din v. Whether a wife has been ill-treated by her husband and turned out of the house, a refusal on her part to live with him does not disentitle her to maintenance. Mere second marriage on the part of husband does not justify first wife's refusal to live with him. But where a first wife has been turned out after continued ill-treatment, a half-hearted attempt to induce her to come back before second marriage must be regarded merely an excuse for the contracting of a second marriage and she is not bound to go back to her husband, nor her refusal to do so will disentitle her to maintenance. *Pritam Singh v. In a claim for maintenance, it is no defence for a husband to say that he is prepared to take his wife back, if the facts show that the wife has reasonable cause for fearing to return to the husband's home. If a wife has been ill-treated and there is ground for believing that if she returns, the ill-treatment will continue, then the wife is entitled to live apart from her husband. In such a case, the husband, who is the guilty party, must maintain his wife. Causing a wife to leave the protection of the husband by ill-treatment is tantamount to driving the wife deliberately from the home. In such a case, the wife is justified in refusing to return to her husband. Bathulu Bhagirathi v. Bathulu Lakshmi Devi.

The use of the word "may" in S. 488, Cr. P. C., shows that a Magistrate has a discretion to decide in what cases the award of maintenance may properly be made, though the discretion must be exercised judicially and reasonably and not capriciously. The refusal to make an order for maintenance against the husband on the ground of the woman living in adultery with a low-caste man, was a proper exercise of the discretion vested in the Magistrate. *Ponnayee v. ————S. 488—Husband and wife—Desertion of wife.

A husband deserted his wife and went away to live elsewhere owing to the constant quarrels between them and made no attempt to maintain her. She instituted a suit for judicial separation but was unsuccessful. Subsequently, there was an attempt on the part of the neighbours to bring about a compromise which also failed as the husband told them that he could not compromise. The wife then applied for maintenance under S. 488. The husband, as a defence, offered to maintain his wife if she lived with him. The Magistrate refused to believe the husband and passed maintenance order: Held, that the Magistrate rightly refused to believe that the belated offer of the husband to maintain his wife was made bona fide. The suit by wife for judicial separation and her failure in it did not alter the fact that the husband had deserted his wife and failed to maintain her. *Bibian Ludwig DeCruz v. In proceedings under S. 488 for the maintenance of a child, the question of its legitimacy was raised. Witnesses were examined on both sides but the Magistrate found himself unable to arrive at any definite conclusion on their evidence as to the legitimacy of the child. He, accordingly, took the course of going to the village and examining without previous notice certain residents as Court-witnesses. After doing this, he offered to examine any one else in the village whom the counter-petitioner might want ; but he did not want to examine any one whom he had not already called. Solely on such new evidence he found that the child was legitimate and awarded maintenance : Held, on revision that since the finding of the Court was based exclusively on evidence subsequently obtained, the counter-petitioner who had already produced all the evidence at his command was likely to have been prejudiced by such a course of action and the Court in pursuing it went beyond the reasonable discretion afforded by S. 540. In re : Manikath Kulappura Veetil Bhargavi Amma.

—S. 488—Refusal to live with husband—Christian husband's conversion to Judaism, effect of.

A Christian wife is not, by the mere fact of the conversion of her husband to Judaism, entitled to live apart and get maintenance from him. So long as a Jewish husband does not harass a Christian wife and so long as he treats her as a husband should, permits her to practise her own religion and does not apply any temporal or moral pressure on her to cause her to abandon her religion or to adopt his, she has no right to leave her husband and should not be awarded maintenance if she does so. But a Christian wife will be justified from withdrawing from the conjugal domicile where there is an attempt on the part of her husband to introduce a system of polygamy, or concubinage into the household. *Talkar v. —S. 488—Neglect or refusal to maintain.

Where it is proved that a husband has not refused or neglected to maintain his wife, a criminal Court acting under S. 488 has no jurisdiction to make an order for her maintenance on the ground that the husband has been guilty of cruelty to her. But that is a very different thing from holding that no evidence of cruelty can be admitted in a proceeding under the section to prove, not indeed cruelty as a ground for separate maintenance, but the conduct and acts of the husband from which the Court may draw the inference of neglect or refusal to maintain the wife. A neglect or refusal to maintain wife may be by words or by conduct. It may be express or implied. Bhikaji v. Maneckji.

—S. 488 (9)—Jurisdiction.

Respondent who lived in Darjeeling came to Calcutta where he resided from the 16th to 23rd January. While he was residing in Calcutta an application under S. 488 was made by his wife to the Presidency Magistrate's Court in Calcutta: Held, that the residence of the husband in Calcutta from the 16th to the 23rd January, when the application under S. 488 was made, was sufficient to give the Presidency Magistrate's Court in Calcutta jurisdiction, having regard to Sub-s. 9 of S. 488. *Jolly v. There is nothing in the provisions of S. 488, which suggest that a husband can avoid payment of sums which a Magistrate might order to be paid under S. 488 (2) by divorcing his wife in the middle of the proceedings. The proper date to be considered for an order under S. 488 (2) is a date on which the application was made. If, on the date on which the application is made, relationship of husband and wife exists, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to pass an order under S. 488 (2) directing the husband to pay sums due on account of maintenance from the date of that application until the period of iddat has expired. *Mahomed Nagman v. It is a general principle of law that an order whose term is not fixed and whose currency is not made expressly dependent upon the continued existence of some circumstance or set of circumstances, remains in force until it is cancelled, and prima facie this rule applies to maintenance orders passed under S. 488. If the husband maltreats her or is cruel to her, the applicant shall be entitled to live separate from the husband wherever she likes and to receive Rs. 15 per mensem as maintenance allowance". The husband refused to provide any house for her and gave her a beating and turned her out: Held, that the condition, in the order, that the husband would provide a house for his wife where she would live separately from his second wife did not amount to the husband and wife "living separately by mutual consent" as laid down in Sub-s. 4 of S. 488. No question of "living separately by mutual consent," was involved in the condition embodied in the compromise. Bhagwan Singh v. Gurcharan Kaur.

—S. 488 (4)—Maintenance—Separate maintenance—Husband having second wife—Burmese Buddhist.

Ordinarily the fact that a Burmese Buddhist husband takes a second wife might be a good reason for the first wife declining to live with him, unless he provides her with a separate house. Where, however, a husband marries a second wife owing to the refusal of his first wife to live with him, but is willing to take back the first wife, the latter is not entitled to maintenance under S. 488 (4). *Po Nycin v. —S. 488 (4) and (5)—Adultery—Meaning of.

The mere fact that a woman, in whose favour an order for a maintenance allowance has been passed, has given birth to an illegitimate child is not sufficient to establish that she has been "living in adultery" for the purposes of S. 488 (5). The words "living in adultery" mean following a course of adulterous conduct more or less continuous. A single act of adultery cannot by itself amount to "living in adultery," and several such acts, if isolated, do not necessarily come within the meaning of that term. But a single act of adultery may be sufficient reason for refusing maintenance when applied for by the wife. Paiki v. Vishwanath.

—S. 488—Adultery—Meaning of.

The words 'living in adultery' in S. 488 (5), denote a continuous course of conduct and not isolated acts of immorality. One or two lapses from virtue would be acts of adultery but would be quite insufficient to show that the woman was "living in adultery" which means that she must be living in a state of quasi-permanent union with the man with whom she is committing adultery. There is clearly a great distinction between "committ-

—S. 491—Muhammadan Law (Shiah)—Custody of children.

According to the Shiah Muhammadan Law, a mother is entitled to the custody of her male child, only until he is weaned, and not, as amongst the Sunnis, till he is seven years of age. But this proposition is correct only when both parents of the child are alive and there is a contest as to who should be entitled to the custody of the minor. Therefore, on the death of a Shiah Muhammadan father, in the absence of any circumstances disqualifying the mother, she becomes entitled as a matter of right to the custody of her minor son as against everybody else including the father's executor. In Muhammadan Law, the mere use of words, in a Muhammadan's will, from which an appointment of a minor's guardian could be spelt out by implication, is not sufficient to deprive the mother of infant children of the right, she undoubtedly has, to have the possession and custody of the persons of such children. There must be a specific appointment. Sherbanoo v. Ajbai. 9 Cr. L. J. 214 : 1 I. C. 309 : 11 Bom. L. R. 75.

Proceedings by way of habeas corpus are proceedings calling upon a person having custody of a prisoner to produce him and demonstrate under what authority he holds him in custody. If the authority be a legitimate authority binding on the officer complying with it, he is bound to obey the order of that authority and the Court cannot interfere. All that the Court can do is to see that there is no patent defect visible in the authority by which the person having custody detains any person. Jamna v. Emperor. 27 Cr. L. J. 37 : 91 I. The underlying principle of every writ of habeas corpus is to ensure the protection and well-being of the person brought before the Court under that writ, and the real interest and well-being of a person brought up on a writ of habeas corpus ought to be not only the determining but the sole consideration. *Zara Bibi v. The powers of the High Court under S. 491, are limited and they do not authorize the High Court to enter as it were upon an enquiry into the conduct of the Political Agent before issuing a warrant of arrest under S. 7, Extradition Act. All that the High Court is concerned with while exercising its power under S. 491 is to see that the authority under which a person is being detained is on the face of it legal and valid. If there are any formal defects in the warrant under which the applicant is arrested, the High Court can certainly take notice of them and can, upon that basis,

—S. 489—Alteration of order—Change in circumstances, what is.

Before the original order of maintenance can be altered, it must be shown that there has been, if not a change in the circumstances of the husband then a change in the circumstances of the wife. The mere fact that the wife is living in a different manner from the manner in which she lived at the time the order of maintenance was passed, does not necessarily constitute a change in her circumstances. Similarly, if the husband has a mistress and two children by her to maintain, that is because he has chosen to take a mistress, that would be no reason for reducing the allowance awarded to his legal wife. *Ma Mya Khin v. M became a sanyasi in 1901 and relinquished his rights as head of the family to N. He became a Brahmo in 1906 and between 1906 and 1910 again began to live with his wife and children and also begot some more children. The elder brothers of the minors had all along been living with N and were educated by him. The wife died in April, 1910. The object of the writ was to prevent the marriage of the minors before they attained the age of 16, and there was no question of morality or corruption: Held, that the petitioner was quite free to keep his daughters unmarried till the 16th year or even after that age, even though he may put his daughters not only to great inconvenience but to danger of ex-communication and the fact of his becoming a Brahmo did not affect the matter: Held, also, that as the petitioner became a sanyasi previously, he was not in 1906, when he became a Brahmo, the guardian in Hindu Law of his children. *Mullusawmy Sastry v. On an application for habeas corpus in respect of detention of a minor child against the guardian's wishes, jurisdiction of the Court is essentially a parental one and must be exercised for the benefit and welfare of the child, the word "welfare" being taken in its widest sense. The moral and religious welfare of the child as well as its physical well-being must be considered, with due regard to its ties of affection. If an infant capable of forming an intelligent opinion expresses its views, the Court is bound to take them into consideration. In the same way, the age of the child is also an important factor. There is, however, no hard and fast rule that in the case of a girl over 16 and a boy over 14, the Court has no option in the matter and that the wishes of the infant must be given effect to. Such a rule is too artificial, and even if such a rule exists in

—S. 491—Custody of children.

The mother of a minor girl between 17 and 18 years of age applied for a writ of habeas corpus for the production of the girl who was living with her step-sister and had consented to give herself in marriage to a relation to whom her mother objected. The girl's choice of her future husband was a free one and she expressed a decided preference to remain with the step-sister: Held, that the proper order to make in the case was to free the girl from all restraint and to set her at liberty to go where she chose. *Saraswathi Ammal v. —S. 491—Custody of children—Welfare of children.

The main consideration for the Court is the benefit or welfare of the child. The term welfare, in this connection, must be read in the largest possible sense, that is to say, every circumstance must be taken into consideration and the Court must do what, under the circumstances, a wise parent acting for the true interest of the child would or ought to do. The moral and religious welfare of the child must be considered as well as its physical well being. Pollard v. Rouse.

The applicant's nephew, who had been under his guardianship for a number of years, went to his sister's house to attend her marriage and refused to return on the ground that he intended to discontinue his studies and to get some work, and that he was kept back to stay with his sister as she was often left alone when her husband went out on duty. The applicant applied for a writ of habeas corpus: Held, that the facts did not amount to a 'detention' of the boy against his will and the case was not one in which an order under S. 491 could be made. *R. S. 491—Jurisdiction—Nature of.

The jurisdiction of Judges of High Court is conferred by the Letters Patent and the manner of its exercise is determined by the Judges who exercised it according to their own notions of what the law requires them to do. The assignment or allotment of work by the Chief Justice to the Judges determines only the cases in which jurisdiction is to be exercised by particular Judges. This cannot, however, deprive any Judge of his individual jurisdiction to entertain applications or issue of a writ of habeas corpus ; nor does it absolve him from his individual duty to determine them on the merits. A duty imposed by the law itself on a particular Judge cannot be transferred to another Judge. The jurisdiction and the duty as regards applications for a writ of habeas corpus are sui generis and do not fall within the framework of S. 108, Government of India Act, or any rule framed thereunder. *Crown Prosecutor, Madras v. Ordinarily the High Court will not interfere with the discretion given to the prosecution by S. 494, but it undoubtedly has power to do so in special circumstances where the withdrawal appears to be manifestly improper. There is nothing wrong in the Prosecuting Inspector consulting the superior officers before putting in his application for withdrawal. S. 494 itself does not prescribe that reasons in writing must be given, but it is obviously desirable that reasons should be given in order to enable the High Court to Judge whether the withdrawal has been rightly made. *Satwarao Nagorao Hatkar v. If the Court finds that the object of withdrawing from the prosecution is to avail of the evidence of the particular accused, and the circumstances of the case are such that it would further the ends of justice to have his evidence and that S. 387 is inapplicable, the Court will not be wrong in giving its consent. If the prosecution, in order to avail of the evidence of an accused as against his co-accused, considers it necessary to withdraw from the prosecution as against him, S. 494 would warrant such a course on the ground of public policy. But the withdrawal is dependent on the consent of the Court; and, therefore, the Court in order to see whether it should consent or not will have to enquire into the reasons which prompt the withdrawal. And if the Court finds that S. 337, with its statutory safeguards is open to be availed of, it will be a sound exercise of its discretion to withhold consent. Harihar Sinha v. Emperor. (F. ———S. 494—Discretion, nature of.

The discretion under S. 494, however, is a judicial discretion, and in cases, where it is open to the prosecution to obtain the approver's evidence by applying for the tender of a conditional pardon under S. 337 (1), the Magistrate must keep the provisions of that section before him when he exercises his discretion. As a general rule, the discretion will be wrongly exercised in such cases if the consent is given before the charge is framed. Haribar Sinha v. Emperor. (F. B.).

To the Public Prosecutor is entrusted discretion to withdraw from the prosecution with the consent of the Court, and his withdrawal puts an end to the case. The law gives him a real discretion in the matter. It may often be proper for him to consult the District Magistrate or other authorities before exercising that discretion, but in the eye of the law and of the Court, the discretion is his alone, subject to the consent of the Court. The Public Prosecutor holds a very honourable and responsible office. Emperor v. Labbai Kutti. 40 Cr. L. J. 437 :

Consequently if, after having made his preliminary order under S. 107, the Magistrate is convinced by evidence, or other materials of which he is permitted to take judicial notice, that the person is no longer likely to do anything which might lead to a breach of the peace, it is open to him to make an order under S. 119 discharging the person. The accused, a First Grade Subordinate Judge, was charged with receiving illegal gratification from one N in respect of (1) a horse, and (2) two hundis for Rs. 55 and Rs. 50, respectively. N was impleaded as a co-accused. By direction of the Court, the two charges were split and were ordered to be tried separately. A Pleader was appointed to conduct the prosecution of the accused before N was joined as co-accused. The horse case having been taken up for trial, the Public Prosecutor withdrew from the prosecution of N. N received an assurance from the District Magistrate that if he gave truthful evidence, the hundi case against him would also be dropped. The Magistrate discharged N under S. 494, Cr. P. C. Objections were taken to the competency of N to give evidence under S. 343, Cr. P. C., and to the power of the Court to administer to him oath under S. 342 (4). It was also urged that the Public Prosecutor had no power to withdraw from the prosecution of N: Held, (1) that the appointment of the Public Prosecutor was for the case and not with reference to any particular accused, and that the Public Prosecutor had every right to conduct the prosecution as against persons subsequently impleaded or to withdraw from the prosecution as against any of the accused. *Govind Balwant Laghate v. ————S. 497—Granting bail—Consideration for.

The accused, who was a Deputy Tahsildar, was charged before the Head Assistant Magistrate of Chittoor with the offence of criminal misappropriation. He was at first on bail but after the examination-in-chief of a few witnesses for the prosecution, the Magistrate cancelled the bail and remanded the accused to jail. When the accused again applied for bail, the Magistrate refused it without recording any reasons. The accused now applied to the High Court for bail. The offence was said to have been committed more than a year and a half before the date of the complaint: Held, that under the circumstances, as the Magistrate had given no reason for cancelling the original bail, the accused should be released on sufficient bail being furnished. Chengarlaya Pillai v. Emperor.

When a man is arrested who is not accused of a non-bailable offence, no needless impediments should be placed in the way of his being admitted to bail. The intention of the law is that in such cases the man is ordinarily to be at liberty and it is only if he is unable to furnish such moderate security, if any is required of him, as is suitable for the purpose of securing his appearance before a Court pending enquiry, that he should remain in detention. *Mir Hashamali Mir Kasamali v. The person for whom bail is given is the subject of the contract. The granting of bail in a non-bailable offence is a concession allowed to an accused person and it presupposes that this privilege is not to be abused in any manner and that the accused person has not come into contact with the prosecution witnesses or to exert any undue influence on them so as to destroy the evidence or to minimise its effect against him. It is a sort of trust reposed in him by Court and if it is found that he has betrayed this trust in any manner or that he has misused the liberty thus granted to him by Court, he disentitles himself to the privilege so granted. This is more specially so, when he happens to occupy a dominating position in relation to the witnesses concerned and can injure or benefit them by his own fiat. Emperor v. Jivon Lal Gauba.

The object of the detention of the accused being to secure the appearance of the accused to abide the sentence of law, the principal inquiry is whether a recognizance would effect that end. ———S. 497—Enquiry—Application for trial—Duty of Magistrate.

On an application for bail, the Court is not called upon to conduct a preliminary trial of the case and consider the probability of the accused's guilt or innocence. It would be entirely exceeding its function if it did that in any detail; but it may incidentally have to look at the weight of the evidence against the accused as a necessary part of its proper function, that is, to inquire whether the giving of the bail as opposed to the arrest of the accused might lead to a real danger of his absconding and not appearing to take his trial, or whether there is any real reason to suppose that he is likely to tamper with the witnesses who would be called against him. *Sanyasappa Naidu v. An accused may ordinarily be released on substantial bail until reasonable grounds are made out for presuming his guilt.

Another consideration is whether there are any grounds for supposing that the accused, if released on bail, would abscond. But if after the granting of bail, it appears subsequently on the production of further evidence that a case has been made out against the accused, it is competent for the Magistrate to direct the accused to surrender. The detention of an accused under trial is not intended to be penal, but its object is to secure attendance. The seriousness of an alleged offence and some evidence of its perpetration by the accused would justify detention. Jamini Mull v. Emperor. 9 Cr. L. J. 409 :

———S. 497—Bail, considerations in granting.

The discretionary power of the Court to admit to bail is not arbitrary but is judicial, and in exercising that discretionary powers, the Courts have to consider the seriousness of the charge, the nature of the evidence, the severity of the punishment prescribed for the offence, and in some instances, the character, means and standing of the accused. *Ramchand v. ———S. 497—Granting bail—Considerations for.

Bail is not to be withheld merely as a punishment and the requirements as to bail are merely to secure the attendance of the accused at the trial. The test is to be applied by reference to the following considerations amongst others; (1) The nature of accusation; (2) The nature of evidence in support of the accusation; (3) The severity of the punishment which conviction will entail; (4) The character of the sureties, that is to say, whether they are independent or indemnified by the accused; (5) The character and behaviour of the accused. *Krishna Chandra Jogti v. It is incumbent under S. 499, to get a bond executed by the person who is released on bail and unless that is done, there can be no valid bond by a surety alone. Similarly, the mentioning of a definite Court before which the accused person is to appear is an essential condition of a bond under S. 499. An accused, who was committed to take his trial at the Sessions Court, was released on bail. The bail bond was in Form No. 42, Cr. P. Below his signature was the undertaking by the surety that he shall cause the accused's appearance at the Sessions Court for the trial, and that in case of the accused making default, he shall be liable to forfeit the amount of the security. The latter declaration did not, however, mention the date for accused's appearance. The accused having made default, the security was forfeited :

—S. 512(1)—Finding of abscondence—Necessity of.

A proceeding under S. 512 (1) is neither an inquiry nor a trial within the meaning of S. 517. The Magistrate has no jurisdiction in the proceedings under S. 512 (1) to come to any finding of fact to the prejudice of the accused in the latter's absence, except the necessary preliminary finding, warranted by the terms of the section, that the accused had absconded and there was no immediate prospect of arresting him. In arriving at a finding as to the accused's guilt of the offence with which he was charged in the first information report, the Magistrate exercises a jurisdiction which is not vested in him. Therefore, if an order for delivery is made by the Magistrate, it must be for delivery to the person entitled to the immediate possession of the property having regard to the indisputable or admitted facts, leaving the parties to fight out their case in the Civil Court. *U Ba Hlaing v. A murder was committed in 1897. The accused ran away at that time and was not heard of till he was arrested in 1915. The witnesses were examined in 1897 on behalf of the prosecution to prove the commission of the offence by the accused. The Magistrate, however, did not record any finding that in his opinion the accused had absconded and that there was no immediate prospect of his arrest. The accused was convicted on the evidence recorded in 1897 : Held, that the evidence given in 1897 was inadmissible to prove the guilt of the accused and that the conviction was bad. *Rustom v. S. 512 requires only that before the Court records the depositions of the witnesses for prosecution, it should be proved that the accused person has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him, and not that a finding should be recorded to that effect. Daya Ram v. Emperor.

Where a Magistrate had clear evidence that the accused were absconding and evidence from which he might reasonably infer that there was no immediate prospect of their arrest, and he expressly stated in his order that he was taking evidence under S. 512, the presumption is that he did his duty and did not record the evidence under the section unlawfully. The mere fact that the Magistrate did not recite a finding that there was no immediate prospect of the arrest of the accused, does not render the evidence inadmissible. Bhagwati v. Emperor.

Where, however, a witness whose deposition has been recorded under S. 512 actually appears in Court at the trial of the absconder and gives evidence, the mere fact that he is unable to remember the details of the occurrence does not render him incapable of giving evidence within the meaning of the section, and his previous deposition cannot be put in evidence against the accused person. The proper procedure in such a case is to read out his previous deposition to the witness under the provisions of S. 159 of the Evidence Act, to refresh his memory, and then to ask him whether he remembers the details of the occurrence. *Bhika v. One W. S. was ordered to show cause why he should not be required to give security for good behaviour under S. 110 of the Cr. P. C., and the order was made absolute. N. S. and J. S. offered themselves as sureties who, along with W. S., executed a bond by which they bound themselves to pay a certain sum as penalty if W. S. should commit a breach of the peace or do any act likely to cause a breach of the peace. A form for a bond under S. 107 was by mistake substituted for the form under S. 110. W. S. having been convicted of an offence under S. 430, Penal Code, for having cut the bank of a canal distributary which watered a village below his village, the Magistrate passed an order forfeiting the bond executed by W. S. and the sureties. It was contended on revision (1) that the bond was void, the proceedings having been under S. 110, Cr. P. C., and W. S. not having been called to show cause under S. 107; (2) that no breach of the peace or act likely to cause a breach of the peace was established; (3) that inasmuch as the Magistrate who convicted W. S. under S. 430, Penal Code, did not order forfeiture as part of the proceedings in that case, the subsequent proceedings were bad, and (4) that as against the sureties the judgment was not conclusive, and that evidence should have been adduced on the forfeiture proceedings that the security had been forfeited: Held, that the bond executed by W. S. was bad in law, for the order was that he should be bound over under S. 110, and that the order forfeiting the security furnished by him must be set aside, that the convicting Magistrate anticipated the forfeiture of the security as a result of the conviction, and no great delay had taken place after the conviction before the order of forfeiture was passed, and that the production of a judgment of conviction, and, if necessary, proof of identity is sufficient in such cases for the issue of notice under S. 514, Cr. P. C., and it is for the surety to show cause against forfeiture. Wadhawa Singh v. Emperor.

It was not open to him to re-consider and add to his order or to proceed piecemeal by passing a sentence once and subsequently passing an order for forfeiture of bonds. Gul Khan v. Emperor.

Subsequently, more than 9 months after the escape and with full knowledge thereof, the surety was ordered to produce the offender before the City Magistrate of Agra in connection with a case at Purnea. The surety having failed to do so, proceedings were taken against him under S. 514: Held, that the order calling upon the surety to produce the offender at Purnea was wholly illegal; that the bail-bond, however, was not discharged by the order directing production at Purnea: that, having regard to the fact that it was the illegal direction of the Magistrate to produce the accused at Purnea that resulted in the surety's failure to produce him, and to the fact that when the order for production at Agra was made months after, it was known that the accused had absconded, and in view of the fact that the surety was not in any way to be blamed, there was only a technical forfeiture. *Prabhu Dayal v. —S. 514—Surety bond—Forfeiture.

The applicant filed a prosecution under Ss. 323, 504 and 506 (1), Penal Code, against Y and six others. He applied to the Magistrate for stay of the proceedings on the ground that he wanted to apply for a transfer of the proceedings from this Court to another Court, and the Magistrate granted an adjournment on getting two surety bonds from the applicant, that he will apply to the High Court for transfer within three weeks of that date, instead of applying to the High Court for transfer to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Evidently the reason for his doing so was that he did not seek a transfer from one Magistrate to another but from one Magistrate to another in the same district, and according to the practice in Sind, an application for transfer of a case from one Magistrate to another in the same District has first to be made to the District or Sub-Divisional Magistrate vested with powers of transfer before an application for transfer is made to the High Court. On the date fixed for the next hearing, the Magistrate trying the case was apprised of this fact and without any demur, he adjourned the hearing. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate rejected the transfer application, but no application for transfer made to the High Court as the parties compromised cases. The Magistrate then took proceedings under S. 514, and called upon the applicant to show cause why the surety bond executed by him should not be forfeited. After getting an application from the applicant he ordered the applicant to pay the full amount of each bond on the ground that although the application for transfer was made to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, no transfer application was made to the High Court : Held, that the applicant merely followed the practice of the Sind High Court ; there had been a technical non-compliance by the applicant with the terms of

S. was called upon by a Magistrate before whom the case was sent up for trial to produce the bullocks on an appointed date but he did not comply with the requisition. Consequently, the Magistrate directed him to execute another bond to produce the bullocks when he may be called upon to do so, and in default, to pay Rs. 1,000. This bond was accepted by the Magistrate and S. S. was directed to produce bullocks on a particular date. He failed to comply with the order, whereupon the bond was forfeited to the extent of Rs. 100. It was contended on his behalf that as it was not a bond under the Cr. P. If, in convicting a person of an offence involving the forfeiture of a bond for keeping the peace, a Magistrate, who has knowledge of the fact that the person before him has, by his conduct, forfeited his bond, does not make any order for forfeiture, he must be taken to have decided not to take action on the bond in respect of that particular breach of the peace, and he cannot thereafter re-consider and add to his order by directing forfeiture of the recognizance. *Emperor v. A entrusted some jewels to B to sell for him. B did not sell them, but gave them to her niece C, who pawned them to D. B was convicted of criminal breach of trust, and the Magistrate ordered the jewels to be returned to A: Held, that the questions whether S. 178, Contract Act, applied in view of the fact that the jewels were pawned by C and not by B, and whether the circumstances were such as to bring the transaction within the first proviso to that section, were matters to be decided by a Civil Court. As A had given the jewels to be disposed of for money, and as they had been so disposed of, he was not entitled to relief in a Criminal Court. During the course of the investigation into a case of dacoity, the petitioners produced certain articles consisting of cash and jewellery before the Police and made certain statements concerning the discovery and production of the articles. They were subsequently charged with and convicted of the offence of the dacoity but their convictions were upset on appeal, the Court holding that the articles produced by the accused had not been identified as the property of the complainant and were not proved to have formed part of the stolen property. Subsequently under S. 517 of the Cr. P. C., the trial Court made an order directing that the articles produced by the petitioners during the investigation should be returned to the complainant; and in making the order, it relied upon the statements of the petitioners made to the Police during the investigation: Held, (1) that the statements made by petitioners to the Police were admissible for the purpose of the proceedings under S. 517, Cr. P. C., but could not be relied upon unless they were proved; (2) that the Court having held that the cash and jewellery in dispute did not belong to the complainant and did not form part of the stolen property, the order directing its return to the complainant could not be upheld, and that the articles should be returned to the petitioners, the complainant being left to his remedy in the Civil Court. *Suleman v. The petitioner was subsequently tried and convicted of an offence under S. 411, Penal Code, in respect of the notes, but was acquitted by the Sessions Judge on appeal. Nearly six months after his acquittal, he applied to the Sessions Judge for restoration of the notes to him. The Sessions Judge rejected the application on the ground that it was barred by limitation; Held (1) that the application was in no sense an appeal against the order of the Magistrate making over the notes to the complainant but an independent application to the Sessions Judge himself with a view to his taking action under S. 520, Cr. —S. 520—Jurisdiction.

If an order passed by a Magistrate under S. 517, is ultra vires, a Court of Appeal, etc., has no jurisdiction to exercise its powers under S. 520 of the Code, inasmuch as, such jurisdiction can only arise from an order legally passed under S. 517. Kishen Chand v. Nanak Chanda,

89 I. C. 673 : 7 L. L. J. 625 :

A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 9.

—S. 520—Jurisdiction.

The petitioner was a trader in Kendu-leaves which were used for the manufacture of biris. The opposite party had taken a lease from the zemindar of the right to collect leaves in jungle and waste lands of the zemindari. The exclusive right to dispose of the leaves in jungle and waste lands was with the zemindar. The petitioner was prosecuted for theft on account of certain leaves in his possession, but the case ended in acquittal in the Sessions Court. The monopolist (opposite party) had in the meantime applied to the Magistrate to seize the Kendu-leaves in the petitioners, phandis in various villages on the ground that they had been collected from jungle and waste lands. The Police accordingly seized a large number of leaves but the Magistrate came to the conclusion that it could not be proved that the leaves came from jungle and waste land, and he, therefore, directed that they should be returned to the petitioner. The District Magistrate acting under S. 520 set aside this order, directing that the leaves should be sold and that the sale proceeds should be retained in criminal deposit awaiting the decision of a Civil Court as to their ownership. Held, that in order that the District Magistrate should have jurisdiction to dispose of property, it was only necessary that he should find that it appeared that an offence had been committed in respect of that property, and it was not necessary that the property should be proved to have been stolen: Held, also that the existence of a monopoly of this kind cannot be held to cast upon another person the onus of proving that Kendu-leaves in his possession were not taken from the jungle and if the monopolist was unable to prove that the property is stolen, the presumption of law was that it was not. The presumption ought to have been applied in the present case, and even if parties talked of going to the Civil Court, the Magistrate ought not, by the application of S. 520 to have made an order tantamount to attachment before judgment in a civil suit. Kasiram Marwari v. Makhanji Dwarka Prasad.

22 Cr. L. J. 110 :
59 I. C. 414 : 12 L. W. 227.

—S. 522—'Criminal force'—Conviction for criminal trespass—Complainant's remedy lies in Civil Court and not under S. 522.

The definition of "force" and "criminal force" in Ss. 349 and 350, I. P. C., contemplate criminal force being used to any "person" and do not take into account such force being used to a "matter of substance." A conviction for an offence of criminal trespass will not necessarily entitle the complainant to seek his remedy under S. 522, Cr. P. C., unless there is finding of the Court that the offence with which the dispossession happened was attended with the use of criminal force on the person of the complainant. Hence where the complainant's allegation is not that any "force" or "show of criminal force" had been made to him, his remedy, if any, lies in a Civil Court and any order passed under S. 522, Cr. P. C., is illegal. Bhani v. Narain Singh.

The dispossession contemplated by S. 522, Cr. P. C. must be accompanied by criminal force, and as a result of the criminal force used, and the mere show of criminal force is not enough for an order under that section. The foundation of an order under S. 522 should be the finding of the Court to the effect that the person in whose favour the order is made has been dispossessed of a specific property by use of criminal force, which forms the material ingredient in the matter of criminal conviction. *Bundi Singh v. Certain conditions of validity.

Although there is no explicit provision of law to require that a Magistrate who passes an order under S. 522, Cr. P. It is not essential in law that an order restoring possession should find a place in the actual judgment. It must be immediate, that is directly arising out of the judgment of the Court convicting in the case and without any fresh materials having in the meantime been produced. Before an order under S. 522 is made, the accused is in law not entitled to any notice. Therefore, such an order passed four days after the conviction of an accused on the express finding in the judgment without any fresh materials and without any notice to the accused, is competent and not without jurisdiction. *Jatindra Nath v. Under S. 522, Cr. P. C., a month after the date of conviction, the trial Judge becomes functus officio in the matter of delivering possession. It would be illogical to hold that in spite of the lower Court having ceased to have the power of giving possession, the revisional Court can, when moved to consider the order of that Court refusing to give possession on the ground of limitation, enlarge that period and grant the relief. Sub-cl. (3), S. 522 comes into play when an appeal or revision has been preferred against the conviction. It is then that the Appellate or Revisional Court is seized of the jurisdiction to restore possession although the original Court may not have done so, and such higher Courts are not bound by the limitation of one month in doing so. But this clause does not help if the Court of Revision is considering the order of the trial Court under S. 522 refusing to grant possession because the time for making the order had passed. *Said Umar v. The Magistrate has not to decide the question of title but merely the question of possession. The question to be decided is, who is entitled to possession. The fact that the accused had been in possession of the property when the charge was made, is not conclusive. Husensha v. Mashaksha.

———S. 523—Duty of Magistrate.

If it is established that the property has recently been stolen or acquired dishonestly in some other way, the thief, or the receiver, or whoever he may be, is obviously not the person entitled to possession, so the Courts have a discretion to find out in a summary way who is so entitled, and have power to hand the property over to him. But the position is very different when no charge is established against the person in possession. Criminal Courts have no jurisdiction to enter upon a roving enquiry about the rights to possession of pieces of property when they are entirely unconnected with specific allegations of crime in respect of them. Where it is proved that the person from whose possession the property was seized came by it dishonestly, the Magistrate may have to consider questions of title in order to determine the best right to possession. But where it appears that the Police have seized property from a person who is not shown to have committed any offence in relation to that property, then the Magistrate can only hold that that person is entitled to possession of the property. Sona Bahuji v. Rao Sobhag Singh.

It is not incumbent upon the Magistrate to hold a judicial inquiry upon oath, for the purpose of passing an order under S. 523. The section itself does not make any magisterial inquiry imperative. The Magistrate has to satisfy himself, on such material as is before him, who is entitled to possession of the property concerned, and can pass an order on Police reports and papers alone. *Chuni Lal v. When a Magistrate passes an order under S. 523, Cr. P. C., for the disposal of property that has been seized by the police, he is required to exercise a judicial discretion. In the absence of anything to show the title to the property, it should be restored to the party in whose possession it was at the time of its seizure. The High Court, though it may set aside the order made by a Magistrate in such a case, has no power to order restitution of the property. Kyin Non v. E Cho.

S. 522, Cr. P. C., contemplates not only criminal force but criminal intimidation too, and it is inconceivable how a person can criminally intimidate an inanimate object. The term “force” is defined in S. 349, Penal Code, and the term “criminal force” is defined in S. 350, Penal Code, and both sections contemplate the use of force to a person and not to a thing. In a case, therefore, where the complainant himself alleges that the house was locked when the unlawful entry was effected, it can, by no stretch of language, be argued that the offence of criminal trespass was attended by criminal force or by criminal intimidation, and in such a case, an order under S. 522 is illegal. *Ram Chand v. A suit, therefore, for the recovery of possession of such property is maintainable, and the fact that such suit is brought more than a year after the order of confiscation is no bar, as it is not necessary to set that order aside. *Secretary of State for India in Council v. For an order under S. 522, Cr. P. C., it must be shown that the owner or occupier of the land was dispossessed by reason of the force shown to him. The order of the Court must be passed within one month from the date of the conviction. It is not sufficient that the application to the Court to exercise its powers should be made within one month of the conviction. In view of the wording of this section it would appear that it was not the intention that notice should be issued to the opposite side before orders should be passed; otherwise it would be easy for convicted persons to bring it about that the Court should never be able to pass order within one month from the date of conviction. *Daw Mya v. disallowance of questions by Judge in pursuance of judicial duty cannot by itself afford ground for transfer application.

A Judge or Magistrate who conscientiously tried a case in a judicial proceeding has a legal duty to apply, to the best of his ability, the rules of evidence, as those rules are laid down in the Evidence Act. And his plain judicial duty is to exclude irrelevant evidence, whether in examination-in-chief or in cross-examination. The allowance or disallowance of questions by a Judge in pursuance of a judicial duty can never by itself afford a ground upon which to base an application for a transfer of a case, unless it is either shown affirmatively that there exists some improper motive or unless upon the face of the questions themselves, disallowed or allowed as the case may be, the only possible inference must be that they have been allowed or disallowed for some ulterior and improper reason. *U Saw, Editor-in-Chief of "The Tun" v. An accused is entitled to ask the Court to consider his defence, whether true or false, and the Court acts illegally in shutting out questions which tend to establish this defence. Indecent and scandalous questions may be put either to shake the credit of a witness or as relating to facts in issue, or to determine whether or not a fact in issue existed. If they are put merely to shake the credit of a witness, the Court has complete dominion over them and may forbid such questions, even though they may have some bearing on the question before the Court. But if they relate to facts in issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed, the Court has no discretion to forbid such questions, though they may be indecent or scandalous. Where questions are put in cross-examination to some of the witnesses for the prosecution which have not been put to earlier witnesses, it is the weight to be attached to the case that is affected and not the admissibility of the questions, and it is no ground for disallowing them even though they are scandalous or indecent. Advocates have ample discretion in the conduct of the case of which they are in charge, and the Court cannot fetter their discretion by insisting that their case should be put to this

Accused was a prosecution witness, and during his cross-examination by the complainant, was alleged to have abused, insulted and assaulted the complainant. On the complaint coming up before the District Magistrate, the latter remarked that he knew too much about various facts connected with the case to be able to deal with the case in an unprejudiced manner and that he did not wish to transfer it to another Court subordinate to him and that the complainant could, if he wished, apply to the High Court for transfer. The following day the District Magistrate re-considered his previous order and practically cancelled it and three days later he passed another order indicating that the allegations in the complaint did not amount to an offence under S. 352 or S. 504, Penal Code, but that there might be ground for a case under S. 500 and made over the case for disposal to the Additional District Magistrate. The second and the third orders were passed in the absence of the complainant. On application by the complainant to the High Court for transfer of the case to some other District: Held, (1) that the District Magistrate was entirely wrong in deciding contrary to his first order that the case should be heard by a Magistrate in his District, nor was he justified in pronouncing an adverse opinion on the merits of the complaint and without affording the complainant an opportunity of being heard in support of his complaint; (2) that in view of the first order of the District Magistrate himself and of the subsequent orders made by him, it was desirable that the case should be heard and decided by some other Magistrate in some other District. *Amar Singh v. Though S. 526 (8) only makes it obligatory to postpone a case when notification is made to the Court before commencement of the hearing, yet when it appears that a bona fide application for transfer is about to be made, it would usually be well for the Magistrate at any stage, to grant a reasonable time to enable it to be made. Doek is the accommodation provided in Courts for persons accused of criminal offence, and it is entirely an act of

It is a salutary rule that Magistrates should ordinarily finish cases within six weeks and that they should submit explanations of delay if any case lasts longer than that period; but the rule should not be allowed to interfere with the course of justice or with a fair decision of any case. On the whole, less time is wasted if Magistrates act strictly, according to the letter and the spirit of the law, without making any special efforts to expedite cases by using extraordinary means, and this anxiety on the part of the Magistrate is not sufficient to create a reasonable apprehension of not having a fair trial. *Kamni Begam v. S. 526—Duty of Magistrate—Application direct to High Court, whether competent.

A Magistrate must not refuse an application for adjournment under S. 526 (8), Cr. P. C., on conjectural grounds. It is only in a case where the circumstances existing at the time of the filing of applications are such that it is quite clear to the Magistrate that there is no bona fide intention of applying for transfer that he can refuse to adjourn. And if he does so refuse to adjourn, he must take care that he passes no final or penal order against the applicant until the applicant has had a reasonable opportunity of demonstrating by making an application for actual transfer that his intention did really exist. A Magistrate should also remember that should he refuse such an application and should the applicant eventually make an application to the High Court, it is probable that whole of the proceedings subsequent to the application might be held to be void even if the High Court came to the conclusion that there was no ground for transfer. *Nathoomal v. A person who was concerned in two cases filed application in both the cases for the staying of proceedings under S. 526, Cl. 8, Cr. P. C. as he intended to apply to the High Court for the transfer of both the cases to another Court. The Magistrate ordered him to execute bonds in each of the cases as provided by the recent amendment to S. 526, and then adjourned the two cases in order to enable him to file an application in the High Court and obtain orders thereon. Applications were in fact filed in the High Court for the transfer of the two cases, and he was ordered by the High Court to deposit a certain sum before notice could be issued to the Magistrate, one deposit being held to be sufficient for both cases. The person, however, failed to make the required deposit, and his transfer applications were dismissed, the person himself having appeared in the meantime in the Court of the Magistrate and asked the Court to proceed with the trial of the cases. On receipt of the order of the High Court, notice was issued to the person to show cause why his bonds should not be forfeited, in both the cases, as he had failed

—S. 526—Grounds—Apprehension of unfair trial.

In an order to make out a good case for the High Court to take action under S. 526, Cr. P. C., it is not sufficient for the accused to merely allege that he will not get a fair trial, but he must lay before the High Court the facts which give rise to this belief in his mind and if those facts are found such that they will reasonably give rise to this belief, a transfer —S. 526—Grounds—Apprehension of unfair trial—Joint trial—Conviction—Joint appeal, whether legal—Separate applications for transfer of joint appeal, whether necessary.

If more than one accused are convicted in a joint trial by one judgment, it is illegal to file one joint appeal on behalf of them although there is nothing illegal if the appeals made separately by them are heard together. It is not absolutely necessary to make separate applications for the transfer of an appeal jointly filed by more than one accused. What has to be established to succeed in a transfer application is a belief in the mind of the accused person that his case will not be fairly tried. Maharaj Singh Gond v. Emperor.

A long series of cases have established the guiding principles upon which Courts should invariably act in dealing with applications for transfer. These are : (1) that it is expedient for the ends of justice to transfer a case from the file of one Magistrate to that of another competent to try it, if, by reason of the words or conduct of the Magistrate before whom the case is pending, any party reasonably apprehends that there is bias against him in the mind of the Magistrate, though there may not be in fact actual bias ; (2) the transfer of a case should be ordered when there are circumstances which may reasonably lead the petitioner to believe that the Magistrate has, to some extent, pre-judged the case against him. *Mahammad Mian v. The mere fact alone that it is the Deputy Commissioner who has laid the complaint, does not afford a reasonable ground for apprehension in the mind of any person that he will not receive a fair trial in the district of the Deputy Commissioner. To get the case transferred to another district, he must further show that the Subordinate Magistrates in that district are in awe of the Deputy Commissioner and look upon him as a person who must, on no account, be crossed. However, cases of this nature which have been instituted by the Deputy Commissioner or District Magistrate of a district, should not be tried by the Magistrate who is in such immediate touch with the Deputy Commissioner or District Magistrate as is the Headquarter's Magistrate of the district. Where there are Magistrates who are not executive officers, it is desirable that they should be chosen to try such cases. Maung Ba Gon v. The King.

A Magistrate is not barred by reason of belonging to one community or the other from trying cases between members of those two communities. But when a Magistrate finds himself placed in such a position, it is incumbent upon him to exercise the greatest tact and discretion in handling the case. But where he commits errors of procedure so as to give rise to an apprehension in the minds of petitioners that they would not get an impartial trial, the case should be transferred. Lal Singh v. Emperor.

The fact, that a complaint is sent to a particular Magistrate for trial at the request of the complainant, is sufficient to raise an apprehension in the mind of the accused that he will not get a fair trial in the Magistrate's Court, and

Although a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he will not have a fair trial is a sufficient ground for transfer, yet in applying that doctrine, regard must be had to the circumstances of each case. On an application for a transfer of a criminal case from the Court of a Magistrate before whom it is pending to that of some other Magistrate, the only question is one of the actual belief of the applicant for transfer. If such person in fact believes that he will not have a fair and impartial trial in a certain Tribunal, it is inexpedient that he should be tried by that Tribunal and the case must be transferred unless that is impossible, however high the certainty of the impartiality of that Tribunal may be in the minds of all right-thinking men, and, however discreditable to the applicant the existence of such belief in his mind may be. *Abdulla v. There were two cases in which charges and counter-charges of rioting had been made. The Magistrate heard the prosecution evidence in one case, and then without hearing the defence evidence in the case, interposed the other case, heard the prosecution evidence in that case and on that evidence, discharged the accused. In his order of discharge he expressed himself in decided terms as to the guilt of the prosecuting party in that case who were the accused in the first case: Held, that the course adopted by the Magistrate was likely to prejudice the accused party in the first case, whose guilt, it might be taken, he pre-judged by his observations in the order of discharge in the other case. The assurance received from the Police peshi clerk in his Court was quite insufficient to justify such a question; (2) that the action of the Magistrate was sufficient to cause the accused to apprehend that a fair and impartial trial would not be had and that the case should be transferred. *Suraj Prosad v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 526

Under the amended S. 526 (8), Cr. P. C., as soon as the Public Prosecutor, complainant or the accused person notifies to the Court his intention to make an application to the High Court for transfer, the Magistrate is bound to adjourn the case and it is not competent to him after such an application has been made to record any evidence at all. Where an accused was served with a summons only three hours before the time fixed for his appearance, his application for adjournment on the ground that he had no sufficient time to get copies and that his leading Counsel was absent was rejected, and an application for stay in view of an application for transfer was also rejected, the first prosecution witness who gave evidence against the prosecution was ordered to be prosecuted for perjury and the case was adjourned when the second prosecution witness did not give evidence in favour of the prosecution even though other prosecution witnesses were ready to be examined: Held, that the circumstances were such as to create in the mind of the accused a justifiable apprehension of partial trial and that the case should be transferred. *Chiranji Lal v. S. 526—Grounds—Refusal to adjourn—Transfer, application for—Adjournment, refusal to grant, effect of—Duty of Magistrate.

When an application under S. 526, Cl. (8), Cr. P. C., is made, it is not for the Magistrate to decide whether the applicant has an apprehension that he would not receive a fair trial at his hands. That is the function of the High Court. The Magistrate is bound to adjourn the case, unless in his judgment, he is bona fide satisfied that the applicant has no intention of making an application for transfer. The refusal of a Magistrate to grant an adjournment to a suspect to enable him to apply for a transfer of the proceedings is a good ground for transfer of the proceedings. Jatvi v. Emperor. 27 Cr. S. 526—Grounds—Refusal to adjourn.

When before the commencement of the trial, a party applies to the Magistrate to adjourn the proceedings on the ground that he intends to apply to the High Court for a transfer, the Magistrate is bound to adjourn the case under S. 526, Cl. 8, Cr. P. C., and if the Magistrate refuses to grant an adjournment, his proceedings subsequent to such refusal, are illegal, and such a refusal is in itself sufficient ground for a transfer of the case. *Crown v. The Court must be satisfied that a reasonable apprehension of unfair trial exists and it can only be so satisfied from the circumstances of the case and from the conduct and behaviour of the accused as well as the accused's character and mental status. Where any doubt can be shown as regards the personal impartiality of the Presiding Judge of the Court, a transfer should immediately be granted ; but where no such personal grounds can be shown, a transfer should only be granted when the Magistrate has shown by his acts or orders that there is a possibility that he may be prejudiced against the accused. The fact that he makes a decision against the accused is not sufficient to warrant any apprehension of partiality, if the order is passed in good faith and the reasons for the order are duly stated. *Fasiuddin v. A Magistrate, in the discharge of the multifarious duties of his office, has to perform a very large number of extra-judicial functions, and in the discharge of his executive duties, he may be compelled to act in a way which would raise a suspicion in the mind of an accused person that he is not likely to get justice when the Magistrate came to inquire into a particular matter judicially. It is of paramount importance that persons arraigned before the Courts should have confidence in the impartiality of those Courts, and, if an accused person has a reasonable cause to apprehend that the Court before whom he is being tried is not completely free from bias, a transfer should be directed. To decide what is 'reasonable' cause, regard must be had to the degree of intelligence possessed by the accused. If the actions of a Judicial Officer, though susceptible of explanation and traceable to a superior sense of duty, are calculated to create in the mind of the accused an apprehension that he will not have an impartial trial, the case should be transferred to some other Judge for trial. *Ahmad Din v. S. 526—Grounds for transfer—Transfer of criminal case—Reasonable apprehensions.

In order to test what is a reasonable apprehension, the Court ought to place itself in the position of the accused to consider the facts and circumstances attending his position. In the present constitution of the criminal judicial administration of the country, a Sub-Divisional Magistrate has to perform some of the functions of the Police as also those of a Judge and a well-balanced mind may not find any bias in the mind of the Judge however incongruous his actions may be. But the appreciation of a mind properly constituted cannot be the standard to judge of the feelings of an ordinary man accused of an offence. If the words used by and the actions of a Judicial Officer, though susceptible of explanation and traceable to a superior sense of duty, are calculated to create in the mind of the accused an apprehension that he may not have an impartial trial, it is expedient for the ends of justice to transfer the case to another Judge for trial. *Kali Charan Ghose v. The policy of law relating to transfer of criminal cases is to inspire confidence in the minds of accused persons in the administration of justice and in the integrity of the Magistracy. The superior Courts are expected to have due regard to the susceptibilities of the accused persons, and if they are satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for entertaining an apprehension that the accused will not have a fair and impartial trial in the Court of a Magistrate, then an order for transfer should be made. The mere fact that in a previous case against other accused under the same section and almost on identical facts the Magistrate convicted the accused then before him is no ground for transferring a case. *Amar Nath v. Though the complainant in a cognizable case is entitled to apply for transfer under S. 526, Cr. P. Where, therefore, such an application is opposed by the Crown, it shall not be granted. The mere fact that the Magistrate lives in the house of the accused which he had taken on rent long before the case was instituted, is not a ground for transfer of the case at the instance of the complainant in a cognizable case, especially if the Crown opposes the transfer. *Emperor v. Where a Magistrate has already convicted an accused person of an offence and the latter, for some reason or other, has to be re-tried, that Magistrate is competent to try the case over again. But, where it is possible, it is desirable that such a re-trial should not be taken by an officer who has already expressed his final opinion upon the matter. The mere fact, that a Magistrate has tried some other case involving somewhat similar facts possibly between the same parties, does not by itself necessarily constitute any ground why a case should not be tried by that Magistrate. *Mahadeb Marwari v. In dealing with the application for transfer, what the Court has to consider is not merely the question whether there has been any real bias in the mind of the Presiding Judge against the applicant, but also a further question whether incidents may not have happened which though they may be susceptible of explanation and may have happened without there being a real bias in the mind of the Judge are nevertheless such as are calculated to create in the mind of the applicant a justifiable apprehension that he would not have an impartial trial. One important object is to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust of the Tribunal and so to promote the feeling of confidence in the administration of justice which is essential to social order and security. *Amar Singh v. Transfer of security proceedings from one Magistrate to another—Revision.

Under the provisions of S. 526, Cr. P. Nor has it jurisdiction to transfer such proceedings in virtue of the general powers of superintendence and supervision conferred upon it by S. 33, Punjab Courts Act, inasmuch as the general power conferred upon the Chief Court by that section relates to the administrative control which it exercises over subordinate Courts and cannot be interpreted as enlarging the powers which are specifically granted to it for a particular purpose by the provisions of S. 526, Cr. In deciding applications for transfer of criminal cases, the law has regard not so much to the motives, which might be supposed to bias the Judge, as to the susceptibilities of the litigant parties. Where there is anything in the case likely to create in the mind of the accused a reasonable apprehension that he may not have a fair and impartial trial, the case should be transferred to another Magistrate. To decide what is reasonable, regard must be had to the degree of intelligence possessed and the standard of honesty and impartiality observed by the accused. Machal v. Matru.

Ordinarily, the Court would not accept the proposition that merely because the case is between Hindus and Muhammadans, either a Hindu or a Muhammadan Judge or Magistrate is ipso facto debarred from hearing it. But where a case has reached a stage in which the unfortunate question of communalism has become a very prominent issue owing to the transfer petitions, it would be desirable in the interests of everybody concerned, that the case should be transferred. *Ama Prashad v. The Crown is as much a party before the Sessions Judge as an accused person. Any motion that has to be made before the Sessions Judge on behalf of the Crown should, therefore, be through the Government Pleader and not by an official or de mi-official letter from the District Magistrate as representing the Crown. When an Appellate Court or a Court hearing a Revision admits the appellant or the applicant to bail or orders that a fine should not be paid up during the disposal of the case, it thereby orders the suspension of the sentence. The officers of the Crown in the majority of cases are bound to be either Hindus or Muhammadans, and if parties to a case are allowed to choose their Courts on a communal basis, it would not be possible to please them all. *Bhagwan Das v. If a Magistrate convicts an accused on a minor charge, when he should have committed him to Sessions on a graver charge, there is a remedy provided by the law, but it would be a very dangerous thing for the High Court to interfere in a pending case and transfer it from the Court which is seised of it, because the Court during the hearing of the case, takes a particular view of the law or the facts. On a charge instituted on a Police report and in which the prosecution is in the hands of the Public Prosecutor, exceptionally strong grounds would have to be shown before the High Court would exercise its power of transfer at the instance of a private complainant when the responsible authorities are satisfied that there is no ground for withdrawing the case from the Court which is hearing it. *Emperor v. The criterion for a transfer under Cl. (1) of S. 526, Cr. P. Where in a trial before a Sessions Judge the accused had a reasonable time for applying to the High Court, before they were required to enter upon their defence, and they abstained from doing so: Held, that the proceedings of the Sessions Judge were not void. A trial is good and valid in every case up to the close of the case for the prosecution. Unreasonable delay or total abstention from moving the High Court might well be taken into account in considering the bona fides of the accused in notifying his intention to the trying Court. But where, before he is called on for his defence, he has ample time to make such an application and does not do so, the legality of the proceedings of the Magistrate cannot be questioned. The fact that a Magistrate exhibits haste in recording the statement of an accused person before all the evidence for the prosecution is concluded,

The action of a Magistrate in refusing to stay the proceedings in his Court on the filing of such an application must be construed as deliberate, and by such action, even if it be precipitate, it gives the accused persons reasonable ground for apprehension that he will not be unprejudiced in the conduct of the trial and is sufficient ground for transfer of the case from his Court: Held, also that as it was the hasty action of the Magistrate that had resulted in the transfer of the case, the costs of the complainant in the future trial should be borne by the Crown. *Baliram v. —S. 526 (8)—Duty of Magistrate—Full opportunity not given—Proceedings void.

After an application for transfer has been made under S. 526 (8), Cr. P. C., a Magistrate is competent to hear and record all the evidence for the prosecution, if he considers that the grounds set forth as reasons for the transfer are insufficient and unlikely to be acceded to by a superior Court. But when the evidence for the prosecution is completed, it is the duty of the Magistrate to allow a fair and reasonable opportunity to the accused to apply for a transfer before calling upon him for his defence. Unless full opportunity is given to an accused who has made an application for a postponement of the case in order to enable him to apply for transfer before he is called upon for his defence, the proceedings are void. *Baggu Mal v. —Ss. 526, 531—Jurisdiction.

With regard to stay applications in criminal matter, the stay order operates only from the date on which the order is communicated to the Court whose proceedings are stayed. The order of prohibition does not take away the jurisdiction of the trial Court, it merely suspends it. If, therefore, the order has not been received, the Court does not lose its jurisdiction because the order has been passed. This reasoning would not, however, apply to an application for transfer. The ordinary rule is that any order operates from the date on which it is passed, the rule with regard to stay proceedings and injunctions being exceptions to that general rule. Hence the Magistrate acts without jurisdiction when he convicts the accused after the order of transfer but before its communication. Nevertheless it does not follow from the mere fact that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction, that his order is void. S. 531, Cr. P. C., would apply to a case of this kind and so prevent the passing of this order without jurisdiction from being void. T. N. Borai Goundar v. Commissioner, Octacamund Municipality.

—S. 526—Duty of Magistrate—Magistrate himself discovering existence of crime and directing institution of complaint—Principle of law—Susceptibilities of litigants.

As a general rule, it is undesirable that a Magistrate, who, by local investigation while on tour, having himself discovered the existence of crime and collected or ascertained the evidence in support of it, thereafter directs, recommends or invites the institution of judicial proceedings against it, should try the supposed criminal. Wherever the circumstances are such as to indicate in a reasonable way that the Magistrate has formed even a prima facie opinion on question of fact which he would have to try, the subsequent trial of such matters by him becomes a mere form and a pretence. In dealing with applications for transfer of cases, the law has regard not so much to the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge, as to the susceptibilities of the litigant parties. One important object is to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust of the Tribunal. Bhop Singh v. Karmoti.

For the purposes of S. 526 (8), Cr. P. Where, at a Sessions trial, the accused applied for an adjournment under S. 526 (8), to enable him to apply for a transfer of the case after the charge was read out and explained to him : Held, that this was not an application made before the commencement of the hearing and that the Court was not bound to grant the adjournment. *Kali Mudaly v. When before the commencement of the hearing, an application is made to a Magistrate under S. 526 (8), Cr. P. C., to adjourn the case for the purpose of enabling a party to apply to the High Court for transfer, the Magistrate is bound to postpone the hearing of the case, and his refusal to do so, renders the subsequent proceedings voidable, if not void. The functions of the District Magistrate under S. 528, Cr. P. ———S. 528—Notice—Transfer of case—Notice to opposite party, whether mandatory—Magistrate not competent to try one of two offences mentioned in complaint—Trial of one case—Prosecution evidence closed.

The omission to issue a notice upon the accused before ordering the transfer of a case against him, though not illegal, is certainly irregular. S. 528, Cr. P. C., which is general in its terms empowers a Magistrate to make an order of transfer only after issuing notice to the person affected, and although, as a rule of practice, it is desirable that notice should be issued, the law is not mandatory upon the point and the omission to issue notice is in itself not a reason for setting aside an order of transfer. *Gobind Swain v. ———S. 528—Notice—Transfer of case—Notice to opposite party, whether necessary—Procedure.

An order under S. 528, Cr. P. C., transferring a case from the Court of one Magistrate to that of another is not illegal merely because it is made without notice to the other party. The question of notice is one of propriety rather than of legality, and should be decided on the facts of each particular case. Where a case, which had been pending before a Magistrate for two months and eleven hearings and in which charges had been framed, was transferred on the motion of the accused without notice to the complainant : Held, that the order of transfer was improper and should be set aside. In re : Hawaji Sakham Mhalaskar.

It is not the object of S. 528, Cr. P. C., that a case should be transferred merely because it is going against a particular party. Where, therefore, a complaint alleges two offences one of which the Magistrate is not competent to try, and the prosecution evidence in the one triable by the Magistrate is practically closed, no transfer of the case should be ordered, as it is open to the complainant after the disposal of the case, which is being investigated by the Magistrate, to move the officer empowered to take cognizance thereof to proceed with the trial of the charge under the other offence. Gobind Swain v. Emperor. 25 Cr. L. J. 1385 :

The fact that a Sub-Divisional Magistrate has refused to transfer a case at the request of a party does not preclude a District Magistrate from making an order of transfer on his own initiative. The distinction drawn between orders passed by a District Magistrate suo motu and orders passed on petitions by parties is without foundation. Santhappa Sethuram v. Govindaswamy Kandiyar. 18 Cr. ———S. 528—Power of High Court to interfere—Order of transfer—Apprehension of want of fair and impartial trial—Inconvenience of accused.

Although it is not the practice of the High Court to interfere with an order under S. 528, Cr. P. C., made by a lower Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction, still it will interfere when there are reasons for interfering with the order of transfer. The convenience of the accused must be regarded in considering the question whether a fair and impartial trial is likely to be held. Jagdamba Sahay v. Emperor.

———S. 528—Power of High Court to interfere—Order of transfer without giving reasons and before issuing notice to other side—Legality.

When the District Magistrate transfers a case from one Honorary Magistrate to another, and no reasons for the transfer are given in the order and no notice has been issued to the other side before the order is passed, the order although irregular, may not be wholly illegal. But the High Court can interfere in revision even with a legal order where it appears just to do so : Held, the order was unsatisfactory and as there was nothing to show that the discretion of the lower Court was exercised properly, and that the other side ought to be given a chance to advance its objections, the order of transfer should be set aside. *Chotemiya v. ———S. 528—Practice—Transfer of case—Case triable by Sessions—Grounds of transfer—Magistrate making inquiry expressing strong views or to be called as witness.

Where a case is triable by the Court of Sessions, it is no ground for transfer of a case that the Magistrate inquiring into the offence had expressed certain strong views against a party or that he was going to be called as a witness. When an order of transfer can be passed by the District Magistrate under S. 528, it is the duty of the person who considers —Interference by High Court.

Even if there is any irregularity in matter of the place where the case ought to have been tried, S. 531 bars the interference by the High Court in the matter on revision. Mahadeo v. Emperor. 11 Cr. L. J. 372 : 6 I. C. 563 : 7 A. L. J. 319.

-----S. 531—Applicability.

S. 531 applies where finding of Criminal Court has taken place in wrong Sessions Division, etc., where the Code applies. Ali Mohamed Kassim v. Emperor. 32 Cr. L. J. 1120. 134 I. C. 209 : 9 Rang. 338 : I. R. 1931 Rang. 273 : A. I. R. 1931 Rang. 164.

-----S. 531—Commitment to wrong Court—Revision.

A point of jurisdiction can be raised at any stage. An order of committal to the Sessions Courts is an order under S. 531 of the Cr. P. C. The High Court can interfere in revision to set aside an order of committal to a Sessions Court which has no jurisdiction to try the offence committed. Bhagwatia v. Emperor. 26 Cr. L. J. 49 : 83 I. C. 577 : 3 Pat. 417 : A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 187.

-----S. 531—Failure of justice.

In the absence of prejudice, or of a failure of justice, the conviction of an accused person for an offence under S. 408, Penal Code, by a Magistrate outside whose territorial jurisdiction the offence was committed, is a mere irregularity cured by S. 531 of the Cr. P. C. The mere objection by an accused person to the jurisdiction of a Magistrate is not conclusive proof that the accused was prejudiced. An accused is liable to conviction by a Magistrate of an offence under S. 408, Penal Code, which has been proved to have been committed by him, even though the offence was also one under S. 447-A, Penal Code, triable only by a Court of Session. Kall Charan Kundu v. Emperor. 22 Cr. L. J. 666 : 63 I. C. 458 : 34 C. L. J. 200 : A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 114.

-----S. 531—Interference—Jurisdiction of trying Magistrate—Revision—Interference by the High Court.

S. 531 is imperative and the Court is to see in every case, in which it is asked to set aside a conviction on the ground that the trying Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case, where there has in fact been a failure of justice. Bimal Chandra Banerjee v. Tez Chandra Banerjee. 19 Cr. L. J. 896 : 47 I. C. 92 : A. I. R. 1918 Cal. 305.

-----S. 531—Local area—Meaning of.

The expression "local area" used in S. 531, is not confined to a Province but includes all local areas governed by the Code of Cr. P. which extends to the whole of British India. Where the Magistrate who tried the case was committed to try the case, the conviction cannot be reversed for the simple reason that the trial took place within a local area other than the one where the offence was committed. Dewan Singh Mastoon v. Emperor, 37 Cr. L. J. 474 (2) : 161 I. C. 635 : 8 R. N. 219 : A. I. R. 1936 Nag. 55.

The Deputy Magistrate brought the complaint to the notice of the District Magistrate who without recording his reasons for so doing, but in obedience to an order of Government, transferred the case to his own file. The District Magistrate also called upon the officer accused to report as to any reasons which he knew for the complaint having been made against him. This report was placed on the record, and was used, as the Magistrate stated in his order, to supply grounds for cross-examining the witnesses produced by the complainant: Held, that the omission on the part of the Magistrate to record his reasons for transferring the case was not, under the circumstances, more than an irregularity, and that his action in calling for a report from the Sub-Inspector and the use made of that report were not improper. In re : Dukhi Kewat.

Where the facts disclose an offence within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate, it is not correct to say that he is not empowered by law to try the person charged for the offence which is within his jurisdiction, because the facts disclose a more serious offence which is beyond his jurisdiction. Where a Magistrate in trying an offence for an offence which he is empowered to try discovers that there is a prima facie case of an offence triable by the Court of Session, the proper course for the Magistrate to adopt is to commit the case to the Court of Session, and if he fails to do so, his proceedings may have to be set aside but they cannot be regarded as being absolutely void. *Dawson v. —S. 531—Trial in wrong place.

Where the offence was committed within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Negapatam, Tanjore District, and the Trichinopoly Magistrate tried the case: Held, that the irregularity of this trial by the Trichinopoly Magistrate was cured by the provisions of S. 531. There is nothing in the language of S. 531 to confine its operation to that limited class of cases where the offence committed within the jurisdiction of a Court is tried by that Court outside the limits of the local area of its jurisdiction. *The Public Prosecutor v. —S. 537—Error in empanelling jury.

In certain cases the failure to choose a jury is not fatal. Assessors may be chosen instead of a Jury and vice versa, and a failure to take objection at the time is an answer to a subsequent objection that a case triable by a jury was tried with assessors, but this is the result of special statutory provisions, and S. 536 presumably contemplates a jury lawfully empanelled. S. 537 also makes provision for errors in the jury list, but an irregularity in the constitution of the jury is not an irregularity in the proceedings before or during the trial within the meaning of S. 537, for the words "other proceedings" must, be read ejusdem generis with the words which precede these. S. 537 refers to a Court of competent jurisdiction. It does not refer to anything done in the matter of the constitution of the trial Court, and in a trial by Judge and jury, the Court is the Judge and Jury. Any material irregularity in the constitution of the Jury affects the constitution of the Court and its competence. It must be in the public interest that a body of persons in whom lies the power to give a verdict of guilty or not guilty should be constituted strictly according to law. Shewaram Jethanand Shivdasani v. Emperor

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 537—S. 537—Error in empanelling jury.

The defect, if any, caused by not selecting Jurymen by lot in a Sessions case triable by Jury is curable by the application of S. 537, the accused's failure to make timely use of the safeguards provided by law, the rights of challenge and objection, is a bar to his relying on the improper constitution of the Court in the stage of appeal. The Judge's omission to refer, in his charge, to the failure of the Village Magistrate to send the first occurrence report to the Police or the Magistrate will not amount to a misdirection, where it did not prejudice the accused by reason of other independent evidence, or mislead the Jury on any material point. In re : Anipe Palladu.

A complaint was made before a Magistrate. The Magistrate, without at once examining the complainant, sent for the papers of the Police investigation and summoned the accused and fixed a date asking the complainant to proceed with the case independently on that date. On the date so fixed, the accused appeared, but the complainant did not. The Magistrate discharged the accused. Subsequently on the same date the complainant appeared and explained the cause of his delay. The Magistrate again without examining the complainant, fixed another date giving the complainant opportunity to examine his witnesses. On the date so fixed, the complainant and his witnesses were examined and a process was issued against the accused. Subsequently, the accused were convicted of the offences complained of : Held, that there was no sufficient cause to set aside the conviction on the ground of irregularity. Bateshar v. Emperor.
